2. Relaxed; weak; not holding fast.

All his joints relax'd:
From his slack hand the garland wreath'd for Eve
Down dropp'd, and all the faded roses shed. Milton.

3. Remiss; not diligent; not eager; not fervent.

This much help and furtherance is more yielded, in that, if so be our zeal and devotion to God be slack, the alacrity and fervour of others serveth as a present spur. Hooker.

Seeing his soldiers slack and timorous, he reproved them of cowardice and treason. Knolles.

Nor were it just, would he resume that charge,
That slack duration should his thunder 'scape. Waller.

Rebellion now began, for lack
Of zeal and plunder, to grow slack. Hudibras.

4. Not violent; not rapid.

Their pace was formal, grave, and slack:
His nimble wit outrap the heavy pack. Dryden.

5. Not intense.

A handful of slack dried hops spoil many pounds, by taking away their pleasant smell. Mortimer.

To SLACK. } To SLA'CKEN. } v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To be remiss; to neglect.

When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord, slack not to pay it. Deuteronomy.

2. To lose the power of cohesion.

The fire, in lime burnt, lies hid, so that it appears to be cold; but water excites it again, whereby it slacks and crumbles into fine powder. Moxon.

3. To abate.

Whence these raging fires
Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames. Milton.

4. To languish; to fail; to flag. Ainsw.

To SLACK. } To SLA'CKEN. } v. a.

1. To loosen; to make less tight.

Ah! generous youth, that wish forbear;
Slack all thy toils, and fear to come. Dryden.
Had Ajax been employ'd, our slacken'd sails
Had still at Aulis wanted happy gales. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit.

This makes the pulses beat, and lungs respire;
This holds the sinews like a bridle's reins;
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn, or stop, as she them slacks or strains. Davies.

Taught power's due use to people and to kings,
Taught nor to slack nor strain its tender strings. Pope.

3. To ease; to mitigate. Philips seems to have used it by mistake for slake.

Men, having been brought up at home under a strict rule of duty, always restrained by sharp penalties from lewd behaviour, to soon as they come thither, where they see laws more slackly tended, and the hard restraint which they were used unto now slacked, they grow more loose. Spenser.

If there be cure or charm
To respite, or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion. Milton.

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all moons some fecundent plant
Allow'd, that poor helpless man might slack
His present thirst, and matter find for toil. Philips.

4. To remit for want of eagerness.

My guards
Are you, great powers, and th' unbated strength
Of a firm conscience; which shall arm each step
To'en for the state, and teach me slack no pace. Ben Jonson.

With such delay well pleas'd, they slack their course. Milton.

5. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or create it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower than make him stand still. Bacon.

This doctrine must supersede and slacken all industry and endeavour, which is the lowest degree of that which hath been promised to be accepted by Christ; and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate. Hammond.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wise man's cumbrance, if not snare; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise. Milton.

Balls of this metal slack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the amorous youth bestow'd the race. Waller.

One conduces to the poet's aim, which he is driving on in every line: the other slackens his pace, and diverts him from his way. Dryden.

6. To relieve; to unbend.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chase by all the flow'r
Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour. Denham.

7. To withhold; to use less liberally.

He that so generally is good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance. Shakspeare.

8. To crumble; to deprive of the power of cohesion.

Some unslacked lime cover with ashes, and let it stand till rain comes to slack the lime; then spread them together. Mortimer.

9. To neglect.

Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls servants, or from mine?
If then they chanc'd to slack ye,
We could controul them. Shakspeare.
This good chance, that thus much favoureth,
He slacks not. Daniel.
Slack not the good presage, while heav'n inspires
Our minds to dare, and gives the ready fires. Dryden.

10. To repress; to make less quick or forcible.

I should be griev'd, young prince, to think my presence
Unbent your thoughts, and slacken'd 'em to arms. Addison.

SLACK. n. s. [from the verb.] Small coal; coal broken in small parts: as slacked lime turns to powder.

SLA'CKLY. adv. [from slack.]

1. Loosely; not tightly; not closely.

2. Negligently; remissly.

That a king's children should be so convey'd,
So slackly guarded, and the search so slow
That could not trace them. Shakspeare.

SLA'CKNESS. n. s. [from slack.]

1. Looseness; not tightness.

2. Negligence; inattention; remissness.

It concerneth the duty of the church by law to provide, that the looseness and slackness of men may not cause the commandments of God to be unexecuted. Hooker.

These thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness. Shakspeare.
From man's effeminate slackness it begins,
Who should better hold his place
By wisdom, and superior gifts receiv'd. Milton.

3. Want of tendency; tardiness.

When they have no disposition to shoot out above their lips, there is a slackness to heal, and a cure is very difficultly effected. Sharp.

4. Weakness; not force; not intenseness.

Through the slackness of motion, or long banishment from the air, it might gather some aptness to putrefy. Bacon.

SLAG. n. s. The dross or recrement of metal.

Not only the calces but the glasses of metal may be of differing colours from the natural colour of the metal, as I have observed about the glass or slag of copper. Boyle.

SLAIF. n. s. A weaver's reed. Ainsw.

SLAIN. The participle passive of slay.

The slain of the Lord shall be many. Isaiah.

The king grew vain,
Fought all his battles o'er again;
And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew the slain. Dryden.

To SLAKE. v. a. [from slack, Skinner; from slock, Islandick, to quench, Lye.]

1. To quench; to extinguish.

He did always strive
Himself with salves to health for to restore,
And slake the heavenly fire that raged evermore. Spenser.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shakspeare.

She with her cold hand slakes
His spirits, the sparks of life, and chills his heart. Crashaw.

From Iülus' head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread
Around his brows, and on his temples fed;
Amaz'd, with running water we prepare
To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair. Dryden.

The fragrant fruit from bending branches shook,
And with the chrystal stream their thirst at pleasure slake. Blackmore.

Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chase,
Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst. Addison.

2. It is used of lime: so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of To slack or slake lime, be to powder or quench it.

That which he saw happened to be fresh lime and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it. Woodward.

To SLAKE. v. n. [This is apparently from slack.]

1. To grow less tense; to be relaxed.

If the the body's nature did partake,
Her strength would with the body's strength decay
But when the body's strongest sinews slake,
Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay. Davies.

2. To go out; to be extinguished.

She perceiving that his flame did slake,
And lov'd her only for his trophy's sake. Brown.

To SLAM. v. a. [lema, Islandick; schlagen, Dutch.] To slaughter; to crush. A word not used but in low conversation.

To SLA'NDER. v. a. [esclaundre, Fr. scandalum, Lat.] To censure falsely; to belie.

Slander Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent. Shakspeare.
He hath slandered thy servant unto the king. 2 Samuel.

Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in untruly and unkindly detacing and slandering it. Whitgift.

Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
By practice hardened as thy slandering trade,
Obtending heav'n for whate'er ills befall,
And putt'ring under specious names thy gall. Dryden.

Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
But cares not if a thousand are undone Pope.

SLA'NDER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. False invective.

When slanders do not live in tongues;
When cut-purses come not to throngs. Shakspeare.
Since that, we hear he is in arms,
We think not so;
Yet charge the consul with our harms,
That let him go:
So in our censure of the state
We still do wander,
And make the careful magistrate
The mark of slander. Ben Jonson.

We are not to be dejected by the slanders and calumnies of bad men, because our integrity shall then be cleared by him who cannot err in judgment. Nelson.

2. Disgrace; reproach.

Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins. Shakspeare.

3. Disreputation; ill name.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most stepmothers,
Ill-eyed unto you. Shakspeare.

SLA'NDERER. n. s. [from slander.] One who belies another; one who lays false imputations on another.

In your servants suffer any offence against yourself rather than against God: endure not that they do

In rellers or flanderers, tell-tales, or fowers of diffenſion. Taylor.
Thou ſhalt anſwer for this, thou ſtanderer! Dryden.

SLA'NDEROUS. adj. [from ſtander.]
1. Uttering reproachful falſehoods.
What king ſo ſtrong
Can tie the gall up in the ſtand'rous tongue? Shak.
To me belongs
The care to ſhun the blaſt of ſtand'rous tongues;
Let malice, prone the virtuous to deſame,
Thus with wild cenſure taint my ſpotleſs name. Pope.
2. Containing reproachful falſehoods; calumnious.
I was never able till now to choke the mouth of ſuch detractors with the certain knowledge of their ſlanderous untruths. Spenſer.
We lay theſe honours on this man,
To eaſe ourſelves of divers ſland'rous loads. Shakſp.
As by flattery a man opens his boſom to his mortal enemy, ſo by detraction and a ſlanderous miſrepart he ſhuts the ſame to his beſt friends. South.

SLA'NDEROUSLY. adv. [from ſlanderous.] Calumniouſly; with falſe reproach.
I may the better ſatisfy them who object the ſe doubts, and ſlanderouſly bark at the courſes which are held againſt that traiterous earl and his adherents. Spenſer.
They did ſlanderouſly object,
How that they durſt not hazard to preſent
In perſon their defences. Daniel.

SLANG. The preterit of ſling.
David ſlang a ſtone, and ſmote the Philiſtine. 1 Samuel.

SLA'VERY. n. ſ. [from ſlave.] Servitude; the condition of a ſlave; the offices of a ſlave.
If my diſſentings were out of error, weakneſs, or obſtinacy, yet no man can think it other than the badge of ſlavery, by ſavage rudeneſs and importunate obtrſions of violence to have the muſt of his error diſpel'ed. King Charles.

SLA'UGHTER. n. ſ. [onſlaugc, Saxon, from ſlagan, ſlegan, to ſtrike or kill.] Maſſacre; deſtruction by the ſword.
Sinful Macduff,
They were all ſtruck for thee!
Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell ſlaughter on their ſouls. Shakſpeare.
On each hand ſlaughter and gigantick deeds. Milton.
The pair you ſee,
Now friends below, in cloſe embraces join;
But, when they leave the ſhady realms of night,
With mortal hate each other ſhall purſue:
What wars, what wounds, what ſlaughter ſhall enſue! Dryden.

To SLA'UGHTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To maſſacre; to ſlay; to kill with the ſword.
Your caſtle is ſurpris'd, your wife and babes
Savagely ſlaughter'd. Shakſpeare.

SLA'UGHTERHOUSE. n. ſ. [ſlaughter and houſe.] Houſe in which beaſts are killed for the butcher.
Away with me, all you whoſe ſoul abhor
Th' uncleanly ſavour of a ſlaughterhouſe;
For I am ſtifled with the ſmell of ſin. Shakſpeare.

SLA'UGHTERMAN. n. ſ. [ſlaughter and man.] One employed in killing.

The mad mothers with their howls confus'd
Do break the clouds; as did the wives of Jewry,
At Herod's bloody hunting ſlaughtermen. Shakſ.

Ten chas'd by one,
Are now each one the ſlaughterman of twenty.
Shakſpeare.

See, thou fight'ſt againſt thy countrymen;
And joinſt with them will be thy ſlaughtermen.
Shakſpeare.

SLA'UGHTEROUS. adj. [from ſlaughter.] Deſtructive; murderous.

Direneſs familiar to my ſlaughterous thoughts
Cannot once ſtart me. Shakſpeare.

SLA'VISH. adj. [from ſlave.] Servile; mean; baſe; dependant.

A thing
More ſlaviſh did I ne'er, than anſwering
A ſlave without a knock. Shakſpeare.

You have among you many a purchaſed ſlave,
Which, like your aſſes, and your dogs and mules,
You uſe in abject and in ſlaviſh part,
Becauſe you bought them. Shakſpeare.

The ſupreme God, t' whom all things ill
Are but as ſlaviſh officers of vengeance,
Would ſend a glitt'ring guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unaſſail'd. Milton.

Thoſe are the labour'd baths of ſlaviſh brains;
Not the effect of poetry, but pains. Denham.

Slaviſh bard, our mutual loves rehearſe
In lying dreams and ignominious verſe. Prior.

SLA'VISHLY. adv. [from ſlaviſh.] Servilely; meanly.

SLA'VISHNESS. n. ſ. [from ſlaviſh.] Servility; meanneſs.

Her father's brother
Would be her lord; or ſhall I ſay her uncle?
Or he that ſlew her brothers and her uncle?
Shakſpeare.

Tyrant, ſhew thy face:
If thou be't ſlain, and with no ſtroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghoſts will haunt me ſtill.
Shakſpeare.

I ſaw under the altar the ſouls of them that were ſlain for the word of God. Revelations.

Slay and make ready. Genejis.

Wrath killeth the fooliſh man, and envy ſlayeth the idly one. Job.

Of Trojan chiefs he view'd a numerous train;
And much he mourn'd, a'l in battle ſlain. Dryden.

He muſt
By blood and battles pow'r maintain,
And ſlay the monarchs, ere he tile the plain. Prior.

SLA'YER. n. ſ. [from ſlay.] Killer; murderer; deſtroyer.

Witneſs the guiltleſs blood pour'd oft on ground;
The crowned often ſlain, the ſlayer crown'd.
Fairy Queen.

They ſlew the ſe that were ſlayers of their countrymen. Abbot.

The ſlayer of himſelf yet ſaw I there;
The gore congeal'd was clotted in his hair;
With eyes half cloſ'd and gaping mouth he lay,
And grim as when he breath'd his ſullen ſoul away.
Dryden.

SLEAVE. n. ſ. [Of this word I know not well the meaning: ſleave ſilk is explained by Gouldman, floccus ſericus, a lock of ſilk; and the women ſtill ſay, cleave the ſilk, for unty it. Ainſworth calls a weaver's ſhuttle or reed a ſlay. To ſlay is to part a twiſt into ſingle fibres.]

I on a fountain light,
Whoſe brim with pinks was platted,
The banks with daffadillies dight
With grats like ſleave was matted. Drayton.

SLEAZY. adj. [often written ſleezy.] Weak; wanting ſubſtance. This ſeems to be of the ſame race with ſleave, or from to ſley.

Theſe all muſt be prepar'd. Dryden.

SLE'DDED. adj. [from ſled.] Mounted on a ſled.

So frown'd he once when in an angry parle,
He ſmote the ſledded Polack on the ice. Shakſp.

SLEDGE. n. ſ. [ꝑleez, Saxon; ſlaggia, Iſlandick.]

1. A large heavy hammer.

They him ſpying, both with greedy force,
At once upon him ran, and him beſet,
With ſtrokes of mortal ſteel, without remorſe,
And on his ſhield like iron ſledges bet. F. Queen.

The painful ſmith, with force of fervent heat,
The hardeſt iron ſoon doth mollify,
That with his heavy ſledge he can it beat,
And faſhion to what he it lift apply. Spenſer.

The uphand ſledge is uſed by under-workmen, when the work is not of the largeſt, yet requires help to batter and draw it out; they uſe it with both their hands before them, and ſeldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Moxon.

It would follow that the quick ſtroke of a light hammer ſhould be of greater efficacy than any ſlower and more gentle ſtriking of a great ſledge. Wilkins.

2. A carriage without wheels, or with very low wheels; properly a ſled. See SLED.

In Lancaſhire they uſe a ſort of ſledge made with thick wheels, to bring their marl out, drawn with one horſe. Mortimer.

SLEEK. adj. [ſleych, Dutch.]

1. Smooth; nitid; gloſſy.

Let me have men about me that are fat,
Sleek-headed men, and ſuch as ſleep a-nights.
Shakſpeare.

How eagerly ye follow my diſgrace,
As if it fed ye; and how ſleek and wanton
Y'appear in ev'ry thing may bring my ruin. Shak.

What time the groves were clad in green,
The fields all dreſſ'd in flowers,
And that the ſleek-hair'd nymphs were ſeen
To deck them ſummer bowers. Drayton.

As in gaze admiring, oft he bow'd
His turret creſt, and ſleek enamell'd neck, Fawning. Milton.

Thy head and hair are ſleek,
And then thou kemb'ſt the tuzzes on thy cheek.
Dryden.

So ſleek her ſkin, ſo faultleſs was her make,
Ev'n Juno did unwilling pleaſure take
To ſee ſo fair a rival. Dryden.

2. Not rough; not harſh.

Some time I ſhall ſleep out; the reſt I'll whiſtle.
Shakſpeare.

Where's Pede?—go you, and where you find him
aſleep,
That, ere ſhe ſleep, hath thrice her prayers ſaid,
Rein up the organs of her fantaſy,
Sleep ſhe as ſound as careleſs infancy;
But thoſe that ſleep, and think not on their ſins,
Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, ſhoulders, faces, and ſhins. Shakſpeare.

If the man be poor, thou ſhalt not ſleep with his pledge. Deuteronomy.

Peace, good reader! do not weep,
Peace! the lovers are aſleep;
They, ſweet turtles! folded lie
In the laſt knot that love could tie.
Let them ſleep, let them ſleep on,
Till this ſtormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with that light
Whoſe day ſhall never ſleep in night. Crafh.

Thoſe who at any time ſleep without dreaming can never be convinced that their thoughts are four hours buſy without their knowing it. Locke.

2. To reſt; to be motionleſs.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burley-boned clown in chines of beef ere I can ſay in thy ſheath, I beſeech Jove on my knees thou may'ſt be turned into hobnails. Shakſpeare.

How ſweet the moonlight ſleeps upon this bank!
Here will we ſit, and let the ſounds of muſick
Creep in our ears Shakſpeare.

The giddy ſhip, betwixt the winds and tides,
Forc'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,
Stunn'd with the different blows, then ſtands at reſt
Till counterbuff'd the ſtops, and ſleeps as it were.
Dryden.

Fair Una to the red croſs knight
Betrothed is with joy;
Though falſe Dueſſa, it to bar,
Her falſe ſleights do employ. Fairy Queen.

Upon the corner of the moon,
There hangs a vap'rous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground;
And that diſtill'd by magick ſleights,
Shall raiſe ſuch artificial ſprights,
As, by the ſtrength of their illuſion,
Shall draw him on to his confuſion. Shakſpeare.

Out ſtept the ample ſize
Of mighty Ajax, huge in ſtrength; to him, Laertes' ſon,
That crafty one as huge in ſleight. Chapman.

She could not ſo convey
The maſſy ſubſtance of that idol great;
What ſleight had ſhe the wardens to betray?
What ſtrength to heave the goddeſs from her ſeat? Fairfax.

In the wily ſnake
Whatever ſleights, none would ſuſpicious mark,
As from his wit and native ſubtilty
Proceeding. Milton.

Doubtleſs the pleaſure is as great
Of being cheated, as to cheat;
As lookers on feel moſt delight,
That leaſt perceive the juggler's ſleight. Hudibras.

Good humour is but a ſleight of hand, or a faculty making truths look like appearances, or appearances like truths. L'Eſtrange.

SLI'GHTNESS. n. s. [from slight.]

1. Weakness; want of strength.

2. Negligence; want of attention; want of vehemence.

Where gentry, title, wisdom,
Cannot conclude but by the yea and no
Of general ignorance, it must omit
Real necessities, and give way the while
T' unstable slightness. Shakspeare.

What strong cries must they be that shall drown so loud a clamour of impieties! and how does it reproach the slightness of our sleepy heartless addresses! Decay of Piety.

SLI'LY. adv. [from sly.] Cunningly; with cunning secrecy; with subtile covertness.

Were there a serpent seen with forked tongue,
That slily glided towards your majesty,
It were but necessary you were wak'd. Shakspeare.

He, closely false and slily wise,
Cast how he might annoy them most from far. Fairfax.

Satan, like a cunning pick-lock, slily robs us of our grand treasure. Decay of Piety.

With this he did a herd of goats controul,
Which by the way he met, and slily stole;
Clad like a country swain. Dryden.

May hypocrites,
That slily speak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, pleas'd with the relish weak,
Drink on unwarn'd, till by inchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose,
And through intemperance grow a while sincere. Philips.

SLIM. adv. [a cant word as it seems, and therefore not to be used.] Slender; thin of shape.

A thin slim-gutted fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a henroost; and when he had stuft his guts well, squeezed hard to get out again; but the hole was too little. L'Estrange

I was jogged on the elbow by a slim young girl of seventeen. Addison.

SLIME. n. s. [ꞅlim, Sax. sligm, Dut.] Viscous mire; any glutinous substance.

By a weak fermentation a pendulous sliminess is produced, which answers a pituitous state. Floyer.

SLI'MY. adj. [from slime].

1. Overspread with slime.

My bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony. Shakspeare.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems,
That woo'd the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by. Shakspeare

They have cobwebs about them, which is a sign of a slimy dryness. Bacon.

The rest are all by bad example led,

1. A missive weapon made by a strap and two strings; the stone is lodged in the strap, and thrown by loosing one of the strings.

The arrow cannot make him flee: sling stones are turned with him into stubble. Job.

Dreads he the twanging of the archer's string?
Or singing stones from the Phenician sling? Sandys.

Slings have so much greater swiftness than a stone thrown from the hand, by how much the end of the sling is farther off from the shoulder joint, the center of motion. Wilkins.

The Tuscan king
Laid by the lance, and took him to the sling;
Thrice whirl'd the thong around his head, and threw
The heated lead, half melted as it flew. Dryden.

Whirl'd from a sling, or from an engine thrown,
Amidst the foes, as flies a mighty stone,
So flew the beast. Dryden.

The banks of either ſide ſeeming arms of the loving earth, that fain would embrace it, and the river a wanton nymph, which ſtill would ſlip from it. Sidney.

The bleſſing of the Lord ſhall ſlip from thee, without doing thee any good, if thou haſt not ceaſed from doing evil. Taylor.

Slipping from thy mother's eye, thou went'ſt
Alone into the temple; there was found
Among the graveſt rabbies diſputant,
On points and queſtions fitting Moſes' chair. Milt.

Thrice around his neck his arms he threw,
And thrice the flitting ſhadow ſlipp'd away,
Like winds or empty dreams that fly the day.
Dryden.

Though with pale cheeks, wet beard, and dropping hair,
None but my Ceyx could appear ſo fair,
I would have ſtrain'd him with a ſtrict embrace;
But through my arms he ſlipt, and vaniſh'd from the place. Dryden.

When a corn ſlips out of their paws, they take hold of it again. Spectator.

SNEE'RER. n. f. [from sneer.] He that sneers or shows contempt.

To SNEEZE. v. n. [nieȝan, Saxon; niesen, Dutch.] To emit wind audibly by the nose.

If one be about to sneeze, rubbing the eyes till tears run will prevent it; for that the humour descending to the nostrils is diverted to the eyes. Bacon.

If the pain be more intense and deeper within, amongst the membranes, there will be an itching in the palate and nostrils, with frequent sneezing. Wiseman.

To thee Cupid sneez'd aloud;
And every lucky omen lent before,
To meet the landing on the Spartan shore. Dryden.

If any thing oppress the head, it hath a power to free itself by sneezing. Ray.

Violent sneezing produceth convulsions in all the muscles of respiration: so great an alteration can be produced only by the tickling of a feather; and if the action of sneezing should be continued by some very acrid substance, it will produce headach, universal convulsions, fever, and death. Arbuthnot.

An officer put the sharp end of his half pike a good way up into my nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently. Swift.

SNEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Emission of wind audibly by the nose.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but
Those flaws, though mortals fear them,
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Are to the main as wholesome as a sneeze
To mans lest universe, and soon are gone. Milton.

We read in Godignus, that upon a sneeze of the emperor of Monomotapa, there passed acclamations successively through the city. Brown.

Angelo, a man whoſe blood
Is very ſnowbroth, one who never feels
The wanton ſtings and motions of the ſenſes.
Shakſpeare.

SNO'WDEEP. n. ſ. [viola bulboſa, Latin.] An herb.

SNO'WDROP. n. ſ. [narciſſoleucoium, Lat.] An early flower.

When we tried the experiment with the leaves of thoſe purely white flowers that appear about the end of winter, called ſnowdrops, the event was not much unlike that newly mentioned. Boyle.

The little ſhape, by magick pow'r,
Grew leſs and leſs, contracted to a flow'r;
A flow'r, that firſt in this ſweet garden ſmil'd,
To virgins ſacred, and the ſnowdrop ſtyl'd. Tickel.

SNOW-WHITE. adj. [ſnow and white.] White as ſnow.

A ſnow-white bull ſhall on your ſhore be ſlain;
His offer'd entrails caſt into the main. Dryden.

SNO'WY. adj. [from ſnow.]

1. White like ſnow.

So ſhews a ſnowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows ſhews.
Shakſpeare.

Now I ſee thy jolly train:
Snowy headed winter leads,
Spring and ſummer next ſucceeds;
Yellow autumn brings the rear;
Thou art father of the year. Rowe.

The bluſhing ruby on her ſnowy breaſt
Render'd its panting whiteneſs more conſeſt.
Prior.

2. Abounding with ſnow.

Theſe firſt in Crete
And Ida known; thence on the ſnowy top
Of cold Olympus rul'd the middle air. Milton.

As when the Tartar from his Ruſſian foe,
By Aſtracan, over the ſnowy plains,
Retires. Milton.

SNUB. n. ſ. [from ſnebbe, Dutch, a noſe; or knubel, a joint of the finger.] A jag; a ſnag; a knot in wood.

Lifting up his dreadful club on high,
All arm'd with ragged ſnubs, and knotty grain,
Him thought at firſt encounter to have ſlain.

To SNUDGE. v. n. [ſnuger, Daniſh.] To lie idle, cloſe, or ſnug.

Now he will fight it out, and to the wars;
Now eat his bread in peace,
And ſnudge in quiet, now he ſcorns increaſe;
Now all day ſpares. Herbert.

SNUFF. n. ſ. [ſnuf, Dutch, ſnot.]

1. Snot. In this ſenſe it is not uſed.

2. The uſeleſs excreſcence of a candle; whence moucher la chandelle.

My ſnuff and loathed part of nature ſhould
Burn itſelf out. Shakſpeare.

But deareſt heart, and dearer image, ſtay!
Alas! true joys at beſt are dreams enough:
Though you ſtay here, you paſs too faſt away;
For even at firſt life's taper is a ſnuff. Donne.

If the liquor be of a cloſe and glutinous conſiſtency, it may burn without any ſnuff, as we ſee in camphire, and ſome other bituminous ſubſtances; and moſt of the ancient lamps were of this kind; becauſe none have been found with ſuch wicks. Wilkins.

3. A candle almoſt burnt out.

Lamentable!
To hide me from the radiant ſun, and ſolace
I' th' dungeon by a ſnuff. Shakſpeare.

4. The fired wick of a candle remaining after the flame.

A torch, ſnuff, and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped in the vapour. Addiſon.

5. Reſentment expreſſed by ſnifting; perverſe reſentment. Not uſed unleſs in low language.

Either in ſnuffs or packings of the duke's,
Or the hard rain which both of them have borne
Againſt the old kind king. Shakſpeare.

Jupiter took ſnuff at the contempt, and puniſhed him: he ſent him home again. L'Eſtrange.

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the noſe.

Juſt where the breath of life his noſtrils drew,
A charge of ſnuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct, to ev'ry atom juſt,
The pungent grains of titillating duſt. Pope.

To SNUFF. v. a. [ſnuffen, Dutch.]

1. To draw in with the breath.

A heifer will put up her noſe, and ſnuff in the air, againſt rain. Bacon.

With delight he ſnuff'd the ſmell
Of mortal change on earth. Milton.

He ſnuffs the wind, his heels the ſand excite;
But when he ſtands collected in his might,
He roars, and promiſes a more ſucceſsful fight.
Dryden.

The youth,
Who holds the neareſt ſtation to the light,
Already ſeems to ſnuff the vital air,
And leans juſt forward on a ſhining ſpear. Dryden.

My troops are mounted; their Numidian ſteeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to ſcour the deſert.
Addiſon.

My nag's greateſt fault was ſnuffing up the air about Brackdenſtown, whereby he became ſuch a lover of liberty, that I could ſcarce hold him in. Swift.

2. To ſcent.

The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heav'n, and ſnuffs it in the wind.
Dryden.

For thee the bulls rebellow through the groves,
And tempt the ſtream, and ſnuff their abſent loves.
Dryden.

O'er all the blood-hound boaſts ſuperior ſkill,
To ſcent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!
His fellows vain alarms rejects with ſcorn,
True to the maſter's voice, and learned horn:
His noſtrils oft, if ancient fame ſing true,
Trace the fly felon through the tainted dew:
Once ſnuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor odours lure him from the choſen game;
Deep-mouth'd he thunders, and inflam'd he views,
Springs on relentleſs, and to death purſues.
Tickel.

3. To crop the candle.

The late queen's gentlewoman!
To be her miſtreſs' miſtreſs!
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I muſt ſnuff it,
And out it goes. Shakſpeare.

Againſt a communion-day our lamps ſhould be dreſſed, our lights ſnuffed, and our religion more active. Taylor.

You have got
An office for your talents fit,
To ſnuff the lights, and ſtir the fire,
And get a dinner for your hire. Swift.

To SNUFF. v. n.

1. To ſnort; to draw breath by the noſe.

The fury fires the peak; they ſnuff, they roar,
And feed their hungry noſtrils with the ſcent.
Dryden.

Says Humpus, ſir, my maſter bad me pray
Your company to dine with him to-day.
He ſnuffs, then follows, up the ſtairs he goes;
Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his ſhoes.
King.

2. To ſnift in contempt.

Ye ſaid, what a wearineſs is it, and ye have ſnuffed at it. Mal.

SNU'FFBOX. n. ſ. [ſnuff and box.] The box in which ſnuff is carried.

If a gentleman leaves a ſnuff box on the table and goes away, lock it up as part of your goods.
Swift.

Sir Plume, of amber ſnuff box juſtly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cane. Pope.

SNU'FFER. n. ſ. [from ſnuff.] He that ſnuffs.

SNU'FFERS. n. ſ. [from ſnuff.] The inſtrument with which the candle is clipped.

When you have ſnuffed the candle, leave the ſnuffers open. Swift.

To SNU'FFLE. v. n. [ſnuffelen, Dutch.] To ſpeak through the noſe; to breathe hard through the noſe.

A water-ſpaniel came down the river, ſhewing that he hunted for a duck; and with a ſnuffling grace, diſdaining that his ſmelling force could not as well prevail through the water as through the air, waited with his eye to ſee whether he could eſpy the duck's getting up again. Sidney.

Bagpipes of the loudeſt drones,
With ſnuffling broken-winded tones,
Whoſe blaſts of air, in pockets ſhut,
Sound filthier than from the gut. Hudibras.

It came to the ape to deliver his opinion, which it did with much ſnuffling and ſnuffled, and conſidered on't. L'Eſtrange.

One clad in purple,
Eats and recites ſome lamentable rhyme,
Some ſenſeleſs Phillis in a broken note,
Snuffling at noſe, and croaking in his throat.
Dryden.

SNU'FFLER. n. ſ. [from ſnuffle.] He that ſpeaks through the noſe.

To SNUG. v. n. [ſnuger, Dutch.] To lie cloſe; to ſnudge.

There ſnugging well, he well appear'd content
So to have done amiſs, ſo to be ſhent. Spenſer.

As the loving couple lay ſnugging together, Venus, to try if the cat had changed her manners with her ſhape, turned a mouſe looſe into the chamber.
L'Eſtrange.

SNUG. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Cloſe; free from any inconvenience; yet not ſplendid.

They ſpied a country farm,
Where all was ſnug, and clean, and warm,
For woods before, and hills behind,
Secur'd it both from rain and wind. Prior.

2. Cloſe; out of notice.

At Will's
Lie ſnug, and hear what criticks ſay. Swift.

3. Slily or inſidiouſly cloſe.

Did I not ſee you, raſcal! did I not,
When you lay ſnug, to ſnap young Damon's goat.
Dryden.

To SNU'GGLE. v. n. [from ſnug.] To lie cloſe; to lie warm.

So. adv. [ſpa, Saxon; ſoo, Dutch; ſo, German.]

1. In like manner. It anſwers to as either preceding or following. Noting compariſon.

As whom the fables feign of monſtrous ſize,
Titanian or earthborn, that warr'd on Jove,
So ſtretch'd out huge in length the arch fiend lay
Milton.

Thick as autumnal leaves that ſtrew the brooks
In Valombroſa, where th' Etrurian ſhades
High over-arch'd embow'r ſo thick beſtrewn
Abject and loſt lay theſe. Milton.

Fir'd at firſt ſight with what the muſe imparts,
In fearleſs youth we tempt the heights of arts;
So pleas'd at firſt the tow'ring Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and ſeem to tread the ſky. Pope.

As into air the purer ſpirits flow,
And ſep'rate from their kindred dregs below,
So flew her ſoul to its congenial place. Pope.

2. To ſuch a degree.

Why is his chariot ſo long in coming? Judges.

Can nothing great, and at the height,
Remain ſo long, but its own weight
Will ruin it? Or is 't blind chance
That ſtill deſires new ſtates t' advance? Ben Jonſon

Amoret, my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy ſtrength does lie,
Where the pow'r that charms us ſo,
In thy ſoul, or in thy eye? Waller.

I viewed in my mind, ſo far as I was able, the beginning and progreſs of a riſing world. Burnet.

Since then our Arcite is with honour dead,
Why ſhould we mourn that he ſo ſoon is freed. Dryden

Upon our firſt going into a company of ſtrangers, our benevolence or averſion riſes towards ſeveral particular perſons, before we have heard them ſpeak, or ſo much as know who they are. Spectator.

We think our fathers fools, ſo wiſe we're grown;
Our wiſer ſons, no doubt, will think us ſo. Pope.

3. In ſuch a manner.

There 's no ſuch thing as that we beauty call,
It is mere coſenage all;
For though ſome long ago
Lik'd certain colours mingled ſo and ſo,
That doth not tie me now from chuſing new. Suckling.

We may be certain that man is not a creature that hath wings; becauſe this only concerns the manner of his exiſtence, and we, ſeeing what he is, may certainly know that he is not ſo or ſo. Locke.

I ſhall minutely tell him the ſteps by which I was brought into this way, that he may judge whether I proceeded rationally, if ſo be any thing in my example is worth his notice. Locke.

This gentleman is a perſon of good ſenſe, and knows that he is very much in ſir Roger's eſteem, ſo that he lives in the family rather as a relation than dependent. Addiſon.

4. It is regularly anſwered by as or that, but they are ſometimes omitted.

So frown'd the mighty combatants, that hell
Grew darker at their frown. Milton.

There is ſomething equivalent in France and Scotland; ſo as 'tis a very hard calumny upon our ſoil to affirm that ſo excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

5. In the ſame manner.

Of ſuch examples add me to the roll;
Me eaſily indeed mine may neglect,
But God's propos'd deliverance not ſo. Milton.

To keep up the tutor's authority, uſe him with great reſpect yourſelf, and cauſe all your family to do ſo too. Locke.

According to the multifariouſneſs of this immutability, ſo are the poſſibilities of being. Norris.

6. Thus; in this manner.

Did you come here a ſtranger or a foe? Dryden.

It concerns every man, with the greateſt ſeriouſneſs, to enquire into thoſe matters, whether they be ſo or not. Tillotſon.

No nation ever complained they had too broad, too deep, or too many rivers; they underſtand better than ſo how to value thoſe ineſtimable gifts of nature. Bentley.

So when the firſt bold veſſel dar'd the ſeas,
High on the ſtern the Thracian rais'd his ſtrain. Pope.

Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal ſpirits, or from the alteration of the conſtitution by ſome more unaccountable way, this is certain, that ſo it is. Locke.

7. Therefore; for this reaſon; in conſequence of this.

The god, though loth, yet was conſtrain'd t' obey;
For longer time than that no living wight
Below the earth might ſuffer'd be to ſtay:
So back again him brought to living light. Spenſer.

Trafficke, or rove ye, and like theeves oppreſſe
Poor ſtrange adventurers, expoſing ſo
Your ſoules to danger, and your lives to wo? Chapman.

If he ſet induſtriouſly and ſincerely to perform the commands of Chriſt, he can have no ground of doubting but it ſhall prove ſucceſsful to him, and ſo all that he hath to do is, to endeavour by prayer, and uſe of the means, to qualify himſelf for this bleſſed condition. Hammond.

It leaves inſtruction, and ſo inſtructors, to the ſobriety of the ſettled articles and rule of the church. Holyday.

Some are fall'n, to diſobedience fall'n;
And ſo from heav'n to deepeſt hell. Milton.

God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and ſo capable of dominion. Locke.

8. On theſe terms; noting a conditional petition; anſwered by as.

O goddeſs! tell what I would ſay,
Thou know'ſt it, and I feel too much to pray;
So grant my ſuit, as I enforce my might,
In love to be thy champion. Dryden.

Here then exchange we mutually forgiveneſs:
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee be all forgotten,
As here my ſoul acquits thee of my death,
As here I part without an angry thought. Rowe.

So may kind rains their vital moiſture yield,
And ſwell the future harveſt of thy field. Pope.

9. Provided that; on condition that: modo.

Be not ſad:
Evil into the mind of God or man
May come and go, ſo unapprov'd, and leave
No ſpot or blame behind. Milton.

So the doctrine be but wholeſome and edifying, though there ſhould be a want of exactneſs in the manner of ſpeaking or reaſoning, it may be overlooked. Atterbury.

Too much of love thy hapleſs friend has prov'd,
Too many giddy fooliſh hours are gone,
May the remaining few know only friendſhip:
So thou, my deareſt, trueſt, beſt Alicia,
Vouchſafe to lodge me in thy gentle heart,
A partner there, I will give up mankind. Rowe.

10. In like manner: noting conceſſion of one propoſition and aſſumption of another; anſwering to as.

As a war ſhould be undertaken upon a juſt motive, ſo a prince ought to conſider the condition he is in when he enters on it. Swift.

11. So ſometimes returns the ſenſe of a word or ſentence going before, and is uſed to avoid repetition: as, the two brothers were valiant, but the eldeſt was more ſo; that is, more valiant. The French article le is often uſed in the ſame manner. This mode of expreſſion is not to be uſed but in familiar language, nor even in that to be commended.

The fat with plenty fills my heart,
The lean with love makes me too ſo. Cowley.

Who thinks his wife is virtuous, though not ſo,
Is pleas'd and patient till the truth he know. Denham.

Not to admire is all the art I know
To make men happy, and to keep them ſo. Creech.

One may as well ſay, that the conflagration ſhall be only national, as to ſay that the deluge was ſo. Burnet.

However ſoft within themſelves they are,
To you they will be valiant by deſpair;
For having once been guilty, well they know,
To a revengeful prince they ſtill are ſo. Dryden.

He was great ere fortune made him ſo. Dryden.

I laugh at every one, ſaid an old cynick, who laughs at me. Do you ſo? replied the philoſopher; then you live the merrieſt life of any man in Athens. Addiſon.

They are beautiful in themſelves, and much more ſo in the noble language peculiar to that great poet. Addiſon.

Common-place books have been long uſed by induſtrious young divines, and ſtill continue ſo. Swift.

As to his uſing ludicrous expreſſions, my opinion is, that they are not ſo. Pope.

The bleſt to day is as completely ſo,
As who began a thouſand years ago. Pope.

12. Thus it is; this is the ſtate.

How ſorrow ſhakes him!
So, now the tempeſt tears him up by th' roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin. Dryden.

13. At this point; at this time.

When
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' ſtrew'd his grave,
And on it ſaid a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and ſigh;
And, leaving ſo his ſervice, follow you. Shakſpeare.

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning; well.

O, ſo, and had you a council
Of ladies too? Who was your ſpeaker,
Madam? Ben Jonſon.

15. It ſometimes is little more than an expletive, though it implies ſome latent or ſurd compariſon. In French, ſi.

An aſtringent is not quite ſo proper, where relaxing the urinary paſſages is neceſſary. Arbuthnot.

16. A word of aſſumption; thus be it.

There is Percy, if your father will do me any honour, ſo; if not, let him kill the next Percy himſelf. Shakſpeare.

I will never bear a baſe mind: if it be my deſtiny, ſo; if it be not, ſo. No man is too good to ſerve his prince. Shakſpeare.

17. A form of petition.

Ready are th' appellant and defendant,
The armourer and his man, to enter the liſts,
So pleaſe your highneſs to behold the fight. Shakſp.

18. So much as. However much. This is, I think, an irregular expreſſion.

So much as you admire the beauty of his verſe, his proſe is full as good. Pope.

19. So ſo. An exclamation after ſome thing done or known. Corrupted, I think, from ceſſez.

I would not have thee linger in thy pain:
So ſo. Shakſpeare.

So ſo; it works: now, miſtreſs, ſit you faſt. Dryden.

20. So ſo. [coſi, coſi, Italian.] Indifferently; not much amiſs nor well.

He's not very tall; yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is but ſo ſo, and yet 'tis well. Shakſpeare.

Deliver us from the nauſeous repetition of As and So, which ſome ſo ſo writers, I may call them ſo, are continually ſounding in our ears. Felton.

21. So then. Thus then it is that; therefore.

So then the Volſcians ſtand but as at firſt
Ready, when time ſhall prompt them to make road
Upon 's again. Shakſpeare.

To a war are required a juſt quarrel, ſufficient forces, and a prudent choice of the deſigns; ſo then, I will firſt juſtify the quarrel, balance the forces, and propound deſigns. Bacon.

To SOAK. v. n. [ſocian, Saxon.]

1. To lie ſteeped in moiſture.

For thy conceit in ſoaking will draw in
More than the common blocks. Shakſpeare.

2. To enter by degrees into pores.

Lay a heap of earth in great froſts upon a hollow veſſel, putting a canvaſs between, and pour water upon it, ſo as to [illegible] through: it will make a harder ice in the veſſel, and leſs apt to diſſolve than ordinarily. Bacon.

Rain, ſoaking into the ſtrata which lie near the ſurface, bears with it all ſuch moveable matter as occurs. Woodward.

3. To drink gluttonouſly and intemperately. This is a low term.

Let a drunkard see that his health decays, his eſtate waſtes, yet the habitual thirſt after his cups drives him to the tavern, though he has in his view the loſs of health and plenty; the leaſt of which he confeſſes is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glaſs of wine, or the idle chat of a ſoaking club Locke.

To SOAK. v. a.

1. To macerate in any moiſture; to ſteep; to keep wet till moiſture is imbibed; to drench.

Many of our princes
Lie drown'd and ſoak'd in mercenary blood:
So do our vulgar drench their peaſant limbs
In blood of princes. Shakſpeare.

Their land ſhall be ſoaked with blood. Iſaiah.

There deep Galeſus ſoaks the yellow ſands. Dryden.

Worms eat, put into the brine you ſoak your corn in, prevents the birds eating it. Mortimer.

2. To draw in through the pores.

Thou, whoſe life's a dream of lazy pleaſure:
'Tis all thy buſineſs, buſineſs how to ſhun,
To bask thy naked body in the ſun,
Suppling thy ſtiffen'd joints with fragrant oil;
Then in thy ſpacious garden walk a while,
To ſuck the moiſture up and ſoak it in. Dryden.

3. To drain; to exhauſt. This ſeems to be a cant term, perhaps uſed erroneouſly for ſuck.

Plants that draw much nouriſhment from the earth, and ſoak and exhauſt it, hurt all things that grow by them. Bacon.

A greater ſpurer than a ſaver; for though he had ſuch means to accumulate, yet his forts, and his garriſons, and his teſtings, wherein he was only ſumptuous, could not but ſoak his exchequer. Wotton.

SO'AKER. n. ſ. [from ſoak.]

1. He that macerates in any moiſture.

2. A great drinker. In low language.

SOAP. n. ſ. [ſape, Saxon; ſapo, Lat.] A ſubſtance uſed in waſhing, made of a lixivium of vegetable alkaline aſhes and any unctuous ſubſtance.

Soap is a mixture of a fixed alkaline ſalt and oil, its virtues are cleanſing, penetrating, attenuating, and reſolving, and any mixture of any oily ſubſtance with ſalt may be called a ſoap. Arbuthnot

He is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers ſoap. Malachi.

A bubble blown with water, firſt made tenacious by diſſolving a little ſoap in it, after a while will appear tinged with a great variety of colours. Newton

Soap-earth is found in great quantity on the land near the banks of the river Hermus, ſeven miles from Smyrna. Woodward

Soap-aſhes are much commended, after the ſoap-boilers have done with them, for cold or ſour lands. Mortimer

As rain water diminiſhes their ſalt, ſo the moiſtening of them with chamber-lee or ſoap-ſuds adds thereto. Mortimer.

SOAPBOI'LER. n. ſ. [ſoap and boil.] One whoſe trade is to make ſoap.

A ſoapboiler condoles with me on the duties on caſtile ſoap. Addiſon.

SO'APWORT. n. ſ. [japonaria, Lat.] A ſpecies of campion. Miller.

To SOAR. v. n. [ſorare, Italian.]

1. To fly aloft; to tower; to mount; properly to fly without any viſible action of the wings. Milton uſes it actively.

'Tis but a baſe ignoble mind
That mounts no higher than a bird can ſoar.
Shakſpeare.

Feather'd ſoon and fledg'd,
They ſumm'd their pens, and ſoaring th' air ſublime,
With clang deſpis'd the ground. Milton.

2. To mount intellectually; to tower with the mind.

How high a pitch his reſolution ſoars. Shakſp.

Valour ſoars above
What the world calls misfortune and afflictions.
Addiſon.

3. To riſe high.

Who aſpires muſt down as low
As high he ſoar'd. Milton.

Flames riſe and ſink by fits, at laſt they ſoar
In one bright blaze, and then deſcend no more.
Dryden.

When ſwallows fleet ſoar high, and ſport in air,
He told us that the weather would be clear. Gay.

SOAR. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Towering flight.

With n ſoar
Of tow'ring eagles, to all the fowls he ſeems
A phœnix. Milton.

To SOB. v. n. [ſeob, complaining, Saxon. Perhaps it is a mere onomatopaia copied from the ſound.] To heave audibly with convulſive ſorrow; to ſigh with convulſion.

When thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the ſad ſtory of my father's death,
He twenty times made pauſe to ſob and weep.
Shakſpeare.

As if her life and death lay on his ſaying,
Some tears ſhe ſhed, with ſighs and ſobbings mixt,
As if her hopes were dead through his delaying.
Fairfax.

She ſigh'd, ſhe ſobb'd, and furious with deſpair,
She rent her garments, and ſhe tore her hair.
Dryden.

When children have not the power to obtain their deſire, they will, by their clamour and ſobbing, maintain their title to it. Locke.

I ſobb'd; and with faint eyes
Look'd upwards to the Ruler of the ſkies. Harte.

SOB. n. ſ. [from the verb.] A convulſive ſigh; a convulſive act of reſpiration obſtructed by ſorrow.

Break, heart, or choak with ſobs my hated breath;
Do thy own work, admit no foreign death Dryden.

There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,
The feeble cheek ſob, loud ſcream, and ſhriller quaſh. Pope

A wound'rous bag with both her hands ſhe binds:
There ſhe collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, ſobs, and paſſions, and the war of tongues.
Pope.

To SOB. v. a. To ſoak. A cant word.

The tree being ſobbed and wet, ſwells. Mortimer

SO'BER. adj. [ſobrius, Lat. ſobre, Fr.]

1. Temperate, particularly in liquors; not drunken.

Live a ſober, righteous, and godly life Com. Pr.

The vines give wine to the drunkard as well as to the ſober man. Taylor

No ſober temperate perſon, whatſoever other ſins he may be guilty of, can look with complacency upon the drunkenneſs and ſottiſhneſs of his neighbour. South.

2. Not overpowered by drink.

A law there is among the Grecians, whereof Pittacus is author; that he which being overcome with drink did then ſtrike any man, ſhould ſuffer puniſhment double as much as if he had done the ſame being ſober. Hooker.

3. Not mad; right in the underſtanding.

Another, who had a great genius for tragedy, following the fury of his natural temper, made every man and woman in his plays ſtark raging mad: there was not a ſober perſon to be had, all was tempeſtuous and bluſtering. Dryden.

No ſober man would put himſelf into danger, for the applauſe of eſcaping without breaking his neck. Dryden.

4. Regular; calm; free from inordinate paſſion.

The ſoberneſs of Virgil might have ſhewn the difference. Dryden

SOBRI'ETY. n. ſ. [from ſobriété, Fr. ſobrietas, Latin.]

1. Temperance in drink; ſoberneſs.

Drunkenneſs is more uncharitable to the body, and in ſcripture is more declaimed againſt, than gluttony, and ſobriety hath obtained to be called temperance in drinking. Taylor

2. Preſent freedom from the power of ſtrong liquor.

3. General temperance.

In ſetting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book ſhould mention either the learning of a prieſt, or the unfitneſs of an ignorant, miniſter, more than that he muſt inſtruct the people how to pitch a feaſt, that is, to ſpeak of moderation and ſobriety in diet. Hooker

4. Freedom from inordinate paſſion.

The libertine could not prevail on men to caſt off ſobriety to give up their religion. Rogers

5. Calmneſs; coolneſs.

Enquire, with all ſobriety and reverence, whether there be in the footſteps of nature any thing like the union of immaterial virtues, and what the force of imagination is. Bacon

Sobriety in our riper years is the effect of a cold concocted warmth; but where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected but an inſipid manhood, and old infancy. Dryden

Sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the stayedness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryden.

6. Seriousness; gravity.

A report without truth; and, I had almost said, without any sobriety or modesty. Waterland.

Mirth makes them not mad;
Nor sobriety sad. Denham.

So'ccage. n. s. [soc, Fr. a ploughshare; soccagium, barbarous Latin.] A tenure of lands for certain inferiour or husbandly services to be performed to the lord of the fee.

All services due for land being knight's service, or soccage, so that whatever is not knight's service, is soccage. This soccage is of three kinds, a soccage of free tenure, where a man holdeth by free service of twelve pence a-year for all manner of services. Soccage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient demesne, where no writ original shall be sued, but the writ secundum consuetudinem manerii. Soccage of base tenure is where those that hold it may have none other writ but the monstraverunt, and such sockmen hold not by certain service. Cowell.

The lands are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure in soccage, or by knight's service. Bacon.

So'ccager. n. s. [from soccage.] A tenant by soccage.

SO'CIABLE. adj. [sociable, Fr. sociabilis, Latin.]

1. Fit to be conjoined.

Another law toucheth them, as they are sociable parts united into one body; a law which bindeth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular. Hooker.

2. Ready to unite in a general interest.

To make man mild and sociable to man;
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline. Addison.

3. Friendly; familiar; conversible.

Them thus employ'd beheld
With pity heav'n's high King, and to him call'd
Raphael, the sociable spirit that deign'd
To travel with Tobias. Milton.

4. Inclined to company.

In children much solitude and silence I like not, nor any thing born before his time, as this must needs be in that sociable and exposed age. Wotton.

So'ciableness. n. s. [from sociable.]

1. Inclination to company and converse.

Such as would call her friendship love, and feign
To sociableness a name profane. Donne.

The two main properties of man are contemplation and sociableness, or love of converse. More.

2. Freedom of conversation; good fellowship.

He always used courtesy and modesty, disliked of none, sometimes sociableness and fellowship well liked by many. Hayward.

So'ciably. adv. [from sociable.] Conversibly, as a companion.

Yet not terrible,
That I should fear; nor sociably mild,
As Raphael, that I should much confide;
But solemn and sublime. Milton.

SO'CIAL. adj. [socialis, Latin.]

1. Relating to general or publick interest; relating to society.

To love our neighbour as ourselves, is such a fundamental truth for regulating human society, that by that alone one might determine all the cases in social morality. Locke.

True self-love and social are the same. Pope.

2. Easy to mix in friendly gayety; companionable.

Withers, adieu! yet not with thee remove
Thy martial spirit or thy social love. Pope.

3. Consisting in union or converse with another.

Thou in thy secrecy although alone,
Best with thyself accompanied, seek'st not Social communication. Milton.

So'cialness. n. s. [from social.] The quality of being social.

Soci'ety. n. s. [societé, French; societas, Latin.]

1. Union of many in one general interest.

If the power of one society extend likewise to the making of laws for another society, as if the church could make laws for the state in temporals, or the state make laws binding the church relating to spirituals, then is that society entirely subject to the other. Tillotson.

2. Numbers united in one interest; community.

As the practice of piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it for the interest of private persons and publick societies. Tillotson.

3. Company; converse.

To make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
Till supper-time alone. Shakspeare.

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man,
Who having seen me in my worser state,
Shunn'd my abhorr'd society. Shakspeare.

Solitude is sometimes best society,
And short retirement urges sweet return. Milton.

4. Partnership; union on equal terms.

Among unequals what society can sort? Milton.

Heav'n's greatness no society can bear,
Servants he made, and those thou want'st not here. Dryden.

Sock. n. s. [soccus, Latin; socc, Saxon; socke, Dutch.]

1. Something put between the foot and shoe.

Ere I lead this life long, I'll sow nether socks, and mend them, and foot them too. Shakspeare.

A physician, that would be mystical, prescribeth for the rheum to walk continually upon a camomile alley; meaning he should put camomile within his socks. Bacon.

2. The shoe of the ancient comick actors, taken in poems for comedy, and opposed to buskin or tragedy.

Then to the well-trod stage anon,
If Jonson's learned sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakspeare, fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild. Milton.

Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,
Nor greater Jonson dares in socks appear,
But gentle Simkin just reception finds
Amidst the monument of vanish'd minds. Dryden.

On two figures of actors in the villa Mathei at Rome, we see the fashion of the old sock and larva. Addison.

So'cket. n. s. [souchette, French.]

1. Any hollow pipe; generally the hollow of a candlestick.

Two goodly beacons, set in watches stead,
Therein gave light, and flam'd continually,
For they of living fire most subtilly
Were made, and set in silver sockets bright. Fairy Queen.

She at your flames would soon take fire,
And like a candle in the socket
Dissolve. Hudibras.

The nightly virgin sees
When sparkling lamps their sputt'ring light advance,
And in the sockets oily bubbles dance. Dryden.

The stars amaz'd ran backward from the sight,
And, shrunk within their sockets, lost their light. Dryden.

Two dire comets
In their own plague and fire have breath'd their last,
Or dimly in their sinking sockets frown. Dryden.

To nurse up the vital flame as long as the matter will last, is not always good husbandry, it is much better to cover it with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it burns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket, and at length goes out in no perfume. Collier.

2. The receptacle of the eye.

His eye-balls in their hollow sockets sink,
Bereft of sleep, he loaths his meat and drink;
He withers at his heart, and looks as wan
As the pale spectre of a murder'd man. Dryden.

3. Any hollow that receives something inserted.

The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured, as in the five brethren of the rose, and sockets of gillyflowers. Bacon.

Gomphosis is the connection of a tooth to its socket. Wiseman.

As the weight leans wholly upon the axis, the grating and rubbing of these axes against the sockets wherein they are placed, will cause some inaptitude and resistency to that rotation of the cylinder which would otherwise ensue. Wilkins.

On either side the head produce an ear,
And sink a socket for the shining share. Dryden.

So'cketchisel. n. s. A stronger sort of chisel.

Carpenters, for their rougher work, use a stronger sort of chisels, and distinguish them by the name of socketchisels, their shank made with a hollow socket a top, to receive a strong wooden sprig made to fit into the socket. Moxon.

So'cle. n. s. [with architects.] A flat square member under the bases of pedestals of statues and vases: it serves as a foot or stand. Bailey.

So'cman or Soccager. n. s. [socaman, Saxon.] A sort of tenant that holds lands and tenements by soccage tenure, of which there are three kinds. See Soccage. Cowell.

So'come. n. s. [In the old law, and in Scotland.] A custom of tenants obliged to grind corn at their lord's mill. Bailey.

Sod. n. s. [sod, Dutch.] A turf; a clod.

The sexton shall green sods on thee bestow;
Alas! the sexton is thy banker now. Swift.

Here fame shall dress a sweeter sod
Than fancy's feet have ever trod. Collins.

Sod. The preterit of seethe.

Never caldron sod
With so much fervour, fed with all the store
That could enrage it. Chapman.

Jacob sod pottage. Genesis.

Soda'lity. n. s. [sodalitas, Latin.] A fellowship; a fraternity.

A new confraternity was instituted in Spain, of the slaves of the Blessed Virgin, and this sodality established with large indulgencies. Stillingfleet.

So'dden. [part. pass. of seeth.] Boiled; seethed.

Can sodden water, their barley broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?
Shakspeare.

Sodden business! there's a stew'd phrase indeed!
Shakspeare.

Thou sodden witted lord, thou hast no more brain than I have in my elbows. Shakspeare.

Try it with milk sodden, and with cream. Bacon.

Mix it with sodden wines and raisins. Dryden.

He that smootheth with the hammer encourageth him that smote the anvil, saying, It is ready for sodering. Isaiah.

So'der. n. s. Metallick cement.

Still the difficulty returns, how these hooks were made: what is it that fastens this soder, and links these first principles of bodies into a chain? Collier.

Soe. n. s. [sae, Scottish.] A large wooden vessel with hoops, for holding water; a cowl.

A pump grown dry will yield no water; but pouring a little into it first, for one bason-full you may fetch up as many soe fulls. More.

Soe'ver. adv. [so and ever.] A word properly joined with a pronoun or adverb, as whosoever, whatsoever, howsoever.

What great thing soever a man proposed to do in his life, he should think of achieving it by fifty. Temple.

What love soever by an heir is shown,
Or you could ne'er suspect my loyal love. Dryden.

So'fa. n. s. [I believe an eastern word.] A splendid seat covered with carpets.

The king leaped off from the sofa on which he sat, and cried out, 'Tis my Abdallah! Guardian.

Soft. adj. [ropt, Saxon; saft, Dutch.]

1. Not hard.

Hard and soft are names we give things, only in relation to the constitutions of our own bodies; that being called hard, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure, by the pressure of any part of our bodies; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon an easy touch. Locke.

Some bodies are hard, and some soft: the hardness is caused by the jejuneness of the spirits, which, if in a greater degree, make not only hard but fragil. Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

2. Not rugged; not rough.

What went ye out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft raiment are in kings houses. Matthew.

3. Ductile; not unchangeable of form.

Spirits can either sex assume, so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure. Milton.

4. Facile; flexible; not resolute; yielding.

A few divines of so soft and servile tempers as disposed them to so sudden acting and compliance. King Charles.

One king is too soft and easy; another too fiery. L'Estrange.

5. Tender; timorous.

What he hath done famously, he did it to that end; though soft conscienced men can be content to say, it was for his country. Shakspeare.

However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair. Dryden.

Curst be the verse, how well soe'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe;
Give virtue scandal, innocence a tear,
Or from the soft-eyed virgin steal a tear. Pope.

6. Mild; gentle; kind; not severe.

Would my heart were flint, like Edward's,
Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine. Shaksp.

Our torments may become as soft as now severe. Milton.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay;
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay. Pope.

7. Meek; civil; complaisant.

Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confess
Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim,
In asking their good loves. Shakspeare.

8. Placid; still; easy.

On her soft axle while she paces even,
She bears thee soft with the smooth air along. Milton.

There, soft extended to the murmuring sound
Of the high porch, Ulysses sleeps profound. Pope.

9. Effeminate; viciously nice.

This sense is also mere ...s of an art
Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell;
Though this dear art doth little good impart,
Since they smell best, that do of nothing smell. Davies.

An idle and soft course of life is the source of criminal pleasures. Broome.

10. Delicate; elegantly tender.

Her form more soft and feminine. Milton.
Less winning soft, less amiably mild. Milton.

12. Gentle; not loud; not rough.

Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in women. Shakspeare.

The Dorian mood of flutes and soft recorders. Milton.

When some great and gracious monarch dies,
Soft whispers first, and mournful murmurs, rise
Among the sad attendants; then the sound
Soon gathers voice. Dryden.

Soft whispering thus to Nestor's son,
His head reclin'd, young Ithacus begun. Pope.

13. Smooth; flowing; not vehement; not rapid.

The solemn nightingale tun'd her soft lays. Milt.

Soft were my numbers, who could take offence,
When smooth description held the place of sense? Pope.

Hark! the numbers soft and clear
Gently steal upon the ear. Pope.

14. Not forcible; not violent.

Sleep falls with soft slumbrous weight. Milton.

15. Mild; not glaring.

The sun shining upon the upper part of the clouds, made them appear like fine down or wool, and made the softest sweetest lights imaginable. Brown.

Soft. interj. Hold; stop; not so fast.

But soft, I pray you; did king Richard then Proclaim my brother? Shakspeare.

Oh! come in, Emilia;
Soft, by and by, let me the curtains draw. Shaksp.

But soft, my muse, the world is wide,
And all at once was not descried. Suckling.

To So'ften. v. a. [from soft.]

1. To make soft; to make less hard.

Bodies, into which the water will enter, long seething will rather soften than indurate. Bacon.

Their arrow's point they soften in the flame,
And sounding hammers break its barbed frame. Gay.

2. To intenerate; to make less fierce or obstinate; to mollify.

I will soften stony hearts. Milton.

Our friends see not our faults, or conceal them, or soften them by their representation. Addison.

I would correct the harsh expressions of one party, by softening and reconciling methods. Watts.

3. To make easy; to compose; to make placid; to mitigate; to palliate; to alleviate.

Call round her tomb each object of desire;
Bid her by all that cheers or softens life,
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.

Musick the fiercest griefs can charm;
Musick can soften pain to ease,
And make despair and madness please. Pope.

4. To make less harsh, less vehement, less violent.

He bore his great commission in his look,
But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryden.

5. To make less glaring.

Ahab rent his clothes, and went softly. 1 Kings.

In this dark silence softly leave the town,
And to the general's tent direct your steps. Dryden.

4. Gently; placidly.

Death will dismiss me,
And lay me softly in my native dust,
To pay the forfeit of ill-manag'd trust. Dryden.

She with a wreath of neaths crowns his brow,
And softly lays him on a flow'ry bed. Dryden.

5. Mildly; tenderly.

The king must die;
Though pity softly plead within my soul,
Yet he must die, that I may make you great. Dryden.

So'ftner. n. s. [from soft.]

1. That which makes soft.

2. One who palliates.

Those softners and expedient-mongers shake their heads so strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Swift.

So'ftness. n. s. [from soft.]

1. The quality of being soft; quality contrary to hardness.

Softness cometh by the greater quantity of spirits, which ever induce yielding and cession, and by the more equal spreading of the tangible parts, which thereby are more sliding and following; as in gold. Bacon.

2. Mildness; kindness.

A wise man, when there is a necessity of expressing any evil actions, should do it by a word that has a secondary idea of kindness or softness, or a word that carries in it rebuke and severity. Watts.

3. Civility; gentleness.

They turn the softness of the tongue into the hardness of the teeth. Holyday.

Improve these virtues, with a softness of manners, and a sweetness of conversation. Dryden.

4. Effeminacy; vitious delicacy.

1. To foul; to dirt; to pollute; to stain; to sully.

A silly man in simple weeds forlorn,
And soil'd with dust of the long dried way. Fairy Queen.

Although some hereticks have abused this ... yet the sun is not soiled in passage. Bacon.

If I soil
Myself with sin, I then but vainly toil. Sandys.

I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds
With the rank vapours of this sin-worn mould. Milton.

Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,
Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,
Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd. Milton.

One, who contemn't for a taste o' th' flesh ...
... the ... earth,
While reeking with a mangled Ombit's blood. Tate.

If the eye-glaſs be tincted faintly with the ſmoke of a lamp or torch, to obſcure the light of the ſtar, the fainter light in the circumference of the ſtar ceaſes to be viſible, and the ſtar, if the glaſs be ſufficiently ſoiled with ſmoke, appears ſomething more like a mathematical point. Newton.

An abſent hero's bed they ſought to ſoil,
An abſent hero's wealth they made their ſpoil. Pope.

3. To dung; to manure.

Men now preſent, juſt as they ſoil their ground, not that they love the dirt, but that they expect a crop. South.

4. To ſoil a horſe; to purge him by giving him graſs in the ſpring. It is in Shakſpeare to glut. [ſaouller, French.]

The ſoiled horſe. Shakſpeare.

SOIL. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Dirt; ſpot; pollution; foulneſs.

By indirect ways
I met this crown; and I myſelf know well
How troubleſome it ſat upon my head:
To thee it ſhall deſcend with better quiet;
For all the ſoil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. Shakſpeare.

That would be a great ſoil in the new gloſs of your marriage. Shakſpeare.

Vex'd I am with paſſions,
Which give ſome ſoil perhaps to my behaviour. Shakſpeare.

Solac'd the woods. Milton.

To SO'LACE. v. n. To take comfort; to be recreated. Obſolete.

One poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and ſolace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my ſight. Shakſpeare.

Were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This ſickly land might ſolace as before. Shakſpeare.

SO'LACE. n. ſ. [ſolatium, Latin.] Comfort; pleaſure; alleviation; that which gives comfort or pleaſure; recreation; amuſement.

Therein ſat a lady freſh and fair,
Making ſweet ſolace to herſelf alone,
Sometimes ſhe ſung as loud as lark in air,
Sometimes ſhe laugh'd, that nigh her breath was gone. Spenſer.

If we have that which is meet and right, although they be glad, we are not to envy them this their ſolace, we do not think it a duty of ours to be in every ſuch thing their tormentors. Hooker.

Give me leave to go,
Sorrow would ſolace, and my age would eaſe. Shakſ.

Great joy he promis'd to his thoughts, and new Solace in her return. Milton.

If I would delight my private hours
With muſick or with poem, where ſo ſoon
As in our native language can I find
That ſolace? Milton.

Though ſight be loſt,
Life yet hath many ſolaces, enjoy'd
Where other ſenſes want not their delights,
At home in leiſure and domeſtick eaſe,
Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eye-ſight expoſes daily men abroad. Milton.

Through waters and through flames I'll go,
Suff'rer and ſolace of thy woe. Prior.

SO'NNET. n. ſ. [ſonnet, French; ſonnetto, Italian.]
1. A ſhort poem conſiſting of fourteen lines, of which the rhymes are adjuſted by a particular rule. It is not very ſuitable to the Engliſh language; and has not been uſed by any man of eminence ſince Milton, of whoſe ſonnets this is a ſpecimen.
A book was writ of late call'd Tetrachordon,
And woven cloſe, both matter, form, and ſtile;
The ſubject new; it walk'd the town a-while,
Numb'ring good intellects, now ſeldom por'd on,
Cries the ſtall reader, Bleſs us, what a word on
A title-page is this! and ſome in file
Stand ſpelling falſe, while one might walk to Mile-End-green. Why is it harder, ſirs, than Gordon, Colkitto, or Macdonnel, or Galaſpe?
Thoſe rugged names to our like mouths grow ſleek,
That would have made Quintilian ſtare and gaſp:
Thy age, like ours, ſoul of ſir John Cheek,
Hated not learning worſe than toad or aſp,
When thou taught'ſt Cambridge and king Edward Greek. Milton.
2. A ſmall poem.
Let us into the city preſently,
To fort ſome gentlemen well ſkill'd in muſick;
I have a ſonnet that will ſerve the turn. Shakſp.

SONNETTE'ER. n. ſ. [ſonnetter, Fr. from ſonnet.] A ſmall poet, in contempt.
Aſſiſt me, thou extemporal god of rhime; for I am ſure I ſhall turn ſonnetter. Shakſpeare.
There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatiſts and ſonnetteers in this art. Spectator.
What wou'd ſtuff this madrigal would be,
In ſome ſtarv'd hackney ſonnetter or me!
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the ſtyle refines!
Pope.

SONI'FEROUS. adj. [ſonus and fero, Lat.] Giving or bringing ſound.
This will appear, if the ſubject matter of ſounds be what it will; either the atmoſphere, or the etherial part thereof, or ſoniferous particles of bodies. Derham.

SONORI'FICK. adj. [ſonorus and facio, Lat.] Producing ſound.
If he ſhould aſk me why a clock ſtrikes, and points to the hour; and I ſhould ſay, it is by an indicating form and ſonorifick quality, this would be unſatisfactory. Watts.

Oft they aſſay'd,
Hunger and third conſtraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefulleſt diſreliſh, writh'd their jaws,
With ſoot and cinders fill'd. Milton.
Our houſehold gods, that droop upon our hearth,
Each from his venerable face ſhall wipe
The Macedonian ſoot, and thine again. Dryden.

SO'OTED. adj. [from ſoot.] Smeared, manured, or covered with ſoot.
The land was ſooted before. Mortimer.

SO'OTERKIN. n. ſ. A kind of falſe birth fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from ſitting over their ſtoves.
When Jove was, from his teeming head,
Of wit's fair goddeſs brought to bed,
There follow'd at his lying-in,
For after-birth, a ſooterkin. Swift.

SOOTH. n. ſ. [ſoð, Sax.] Truth; reality. Obſolete.
Sir, underſtand you this of me in ſooth,
The youngeſt daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all acceſs of ſuitors,
Until the elder ſiſter firſt be wed. Shakſpeare.
He looks like ſooth: he ſays he loves my daughter,
I think ſo too; for never gaz'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll ſtand and read
My daughter's eyes. Shakſpeare.
If I have any ſkill in ſoothſaying, as in ſooth I have none, it doth prognoſticate that I ſhall change caps. Camden.
The very ſooth of it is, that an ill-habit has the force of an ill fate. L'Eſtrange.
I did not mean to chide you;
For, ſooth to ſay, I hold it noble in you
To cheriſh the diſtreſs'd. Rowe.

SOOTH. adj. [ſoð, Sax.] Pleaſing; delightful.
Some other means I have,
Which once of Melibœus old I learn'd,
The ſoothſt ſhepherd that e'er pip'd on plains.
Milton.

SOOTH. n. ſ. Sweetneſs; kindneſs. This ſeems to be the meaning here.
That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the ſentence of dread banniſhment
On yond proud man, ſhould take it off again
With words of ſooth! Shakſpeare.

To SOOTH. v. a. [ȝeſoðian, Saxon.]
1. To flatter; to pleaſe with blandiſhments.
In ſoothing them, we nouriſh 'gainſt our tenure
The cockle of rebellion, inſolence, ſedition. Shakſp.
Can I ſooth tyranny?
Seem pleas'd to ſee my royal maſter murder'd,
His crown uſurp'd, a diſtaff in the throne? Dryden.
By his fair daughter is the chief confin'd,
Who ſooths to dear delight his anxious mind,
Succeſs-leſs all her ſoft en eff's prove,
To banniſh from his breaſt his country's love. Pope.
Thanks he that Memnon, ſoldier as he is,
Thoughtleſs and dull, will liſten to his ſoothing! Rowe.
I've tried the force of every reaſon on him,
Sooth'd and cares'd, been angry, ſooth'd again;
Laid ſafety, life, and intereſt in his ſight;
But all are vain, he ſcorns them all for Cato. Addiſ.
2. To calm; to ſoften; to mollify.
The beldame
Soothe her with blandiſhments, and frights with threats. Dryden.
3. To gratify; to pleaſe.
This calm'd his cares; ſooth'd with his future fame,
And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

SO'OTHER. n. ſ. [from ſooth.] A flatterer; one who gains by blandiſhments.

I cannot flatter: I defy
The tongues of flatters. Shakspeare

To Soo'THSAY. v. n. [sooth and say.] To predict; to foretell.

All the gaſtly legions that troop
Under the ſooty flag of Acheron;
Harpies and hydras, and all monſtrous forms. Milton.
Swift on his ſooty pinions flits the gnome,
And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dome. Pope.

To Soo'TY. v. n. [from ſoot.] To make black with ſoot.
Then (for his own weeds) ſhirt and coat all rent,
Tann'd and all footed with noiſome ſmoke
She put him on, and over all a cloke. Chapman

Sop. n. ſ. [ſop, Saxon; ſopa, Spaniſh; ſoppe, Dutch.]

1. Any thing ſteeped in liquor, commonly to be eaten.
The bounded waters
Would lift their boſoms higher than the ſhores,
And make a ſop of all this ſolid globe Shakſpeare.
Draw, you rogue! for though it be night, yet the moon ſhines: I'll make a ſop o' th' moonſhine of you. Shakſpeare.
Sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itſelf. Bacon

2. Any thing given to pacify, from the ſop given to Cerberus.
The prudent Sibyl had before prepar'd
A ſop, in honey ſteep'd, to charm the guard;
Which, mix'd with powerful drugs, ſhe caſt before
His greedy grinning jaws, juſt op'd to roar. Dryden.
Ill nature is not cured with a ſop; quarrelſome men, as well as quarrelſome curs, are worſe for fair uſage. L'Eſtrange.
To Cerberus they give a ſop,
His trapple barking mouth to ſtop. Swift.

To Sop. v. a. To ſteep in liquor.

Sope. n. ſ. [See Soap.]

Soph. n. ſ. [from ſophiſta, Latin.] A young man who has been two years at the univerſity.
Three Cambridge ſophs and three pert templars came,
The ſame their talents, and their taſtes the ſame;
Each prompt to query, anſwer, and debate,
And ſmit with love of poeſy and prate. Pope.

So'PHI. n. ſ. [Perſian.] The emperour of Perſia.
By this ſcimitar
That ſlew the ſophi and a Perſian prince. Shakſp.
A fig for the ſultan and ſophi. Congreve.

So'PHISM. n. ſ. [ſophiſma, Lat.] A ſallacious argument; an unſound ſubtilty; a fallacy.
When a falſe argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a ſophiſm or fallacy. Watts.
I, who as yet was never known to ſhow
Falſe pity to premeditated woe,
Will graciouſly explain great nature's laws,
And hear thy ſophiſms in ſo plain a cauſe. Harte.

So'PHIST. n. ſ. [ſophiſta, Lat.] A profeſſor of philoſophy.
The court of Creſus is ſaid to have been much reſorted to by the ſophiſts of Greece, in the happy beginning of his reign. Temple.

So'PHISTER. n. ſ. [ſophiſte, Fr. ſophiſta, Latin.]

1. A diſputant fallaciouſly ſubtle; an artful but inſidious logician.
A ſubtle traitor needs no ſophiſter. Shakſpeare.
If a heathen philoſopher brings arguments from reaſon, which none of our atheiſtical ſophiſters can confute, for the immortality of the ſoul, I hope they will ſo weigh the conſequences, as neither to talk nor live as if there was no ſuch thing. Denham.
Not all the ſubtle objections of ſophiſters and rabbies, againſt the goſpel, ſo much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproach of thoſe crimes with which they aſperſed the aſſemblies of chriſtians. Rogers

2. A profeſſor of philoſophy; a ſophiſt. This ſenſe is antiquated.
Alcidamus the ſophiſter hath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excelleth premeditated ſpeech. Hooker.

Sophi'STICAL. adj. [ſophiſtique, Fr. from ſophiſt.] Fallaciouſly ſubtle; logically deceitful.
Neither know I whether I ſhould prefer for madneſs, and ſophiſtical couzenage, that the ſame body of Chriſt ſhould be in a thouſand places at once of this ſublunary world. Hall
When the ſtate of the controverſy is well underſtood, the difficulty will not be great in giving anſwers to all his ſophiſtical cavils. Stillingfleet
That may ſeem a demonſtration for the preſent, which to poſterity will appear a mere ſophiſtical knot. More

Sophi'STICALLY. adv. [from ſophiſtical.] With fallacious ſubtilty.
Bolingbroke argues moſt ſophiſtically. Swift

To Sophi'STICATE. v. a. [ſophiſtiquer, Fr. from ſophiſt.] To adulterate; to corrupt with ſomething ſpurious.
If the paſſions of the mind be ſtrong, they eaſily ſophiſticate the underſtanding; they make it apt to believe upon every ſlender warrant, and to imagine infallible truth where ſcarce any probable ſhew appeareth. Hooker.
Here 's three of us are ſophiſticated. Shakſpeare
Divers experiments ſucceeded not, becauſe they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with ſophiſticated ones. Bacon
The only perſons amongſt the heathens, who ſophiſticated nature and philoſophy, were the ſtocks; who affirmed a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of cauſes, reaching even to the cloſeſt acts of man's will. South.
Yet the rich cullies may their boarding ſpare,
They purchaſe but ſophiſticated ware
'Tis prodigality that buys deceit,
Where both the giver and the taker cheat. Dryden.
The eye hath its coats and humours tranſparent and colourleſs, leſt it ſhould tinge and ſophiſticate the light that it lets in by a natural jaundice. Bentley.

Sophi'STICATE, part. adj. [from the verb.] Adulterate; not genuine.
Wine ſparkles brighter far than the,
'Tis pure and right, without deceit,
And that no woman e'er will be;
No, they are all ſophiſticate. Cowley.
Since then a great part of our ſcientifical treaſure is moſt likely to be adulterate, though all bears the image and ſuperſcription of truth; the only way to know what is ſophiſticate and what is not ſo, is to bring all to the examen of the touchſtone. Glanville.
So truth, when only one ſupplied the ſtate,
Grew ſcarce and dear, and yet ſophiſticate. Dryden.

Sophistica'TION. n. ſ. [ſophiſtication, Fr. from ſophiſticate.] Adulteration; not genuineneſs.
Sophiſtication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating any thing with what is not ſo good, for the ſake of unlawful gain. Quincy.
The drugs and ſimples ſold in ſhops generally are adulterated by the fraudulent avarice of the ſellers, eſpecially if the precountenes may make their ſophiſtication very beneficial. Boyle.
Beſides your daily ſubmiſſion to ſophiſtications of ſenſe, we have inability to prevent the miſcarriages of our junior reaſons. Glanville.

Sophistica'TOR. n. ſ. [from ſophiſticate.] Adulterator; one that makes things not genuine.

So'PHISTRY. n. ſ. [from ſophiſt.]

1. Fallacious ratiocination.
His ſophiſtry prevailed, his father believed. Sidney.
Theſe men have obſcured and confounded the natures of things by their falſe principles and wretched ſophiſtry; though an act be never ſo hateful, they will ſtrip it of its guilt. South

2. Logical exerciſe.
The more youthful exerciſes of ſophiſtry, themes and declamations. Felton.

So'RCERER. n. ſ. [ſorcier, Fr. ſortiarius, low Lat.] A conjurer; an enchanter; a magician.
They ſay this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Dark working ſorcerers that change the mind,
Soul killing witches that deform the body,
And many ſuch like libertines of ſin. Shakſpeare.
The wonders of the power of witchcraft upon kings and magiſtrates may be aſcribed to the weakneſs of imagination; for it is hard for a witch or ſorcerer to put on a belief that they can hurt ſuch. Bacon.
He ſaw a ſable ſorcerer ariſe,
All ſudden gorgons hiſs, and dragons glare,
And ten horn'd fiends. Pope.
The Egyptian ſorcerers contended with Moſes; but the wonders which Moſes wrought did ſo far tranſcend the power of magicians, as made them confeſs it was the finger of God. Watts.

So'RCERESS. n. ſ. [female of ſorcerer.] A female magician; an enchantreſs.
Bring forth that ſorcereſs condemn'd to burn. Shakſpeare.

Divers witches and forceresses have fed upon man's flesh, to aid their imagination with high and foul vapours. Bacon.

The snaky forceress that fat
Just by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key,
Ris'n, and with hideous outcry rush'd between. Milton.

How cunningly the forceress displays
Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine! Milton.

So'rcerous. adj. Containing enchantments. Not used.

Th' art ent'ring Circe's house,
Where by her med'cines, black and forcerous,
Thy souldiers all are shut in well arm'd sties
And turn'd to swine. Chapman.

So'rcery. n. f. Magick; enchantment; conjuration; witchcraft; charms.

This witch Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and forceries terrible,
Was banish'd. Shakspeare.

Adders wisdom I have learn'd,
To fence my ears against thy forceries. Milton.

Acteon has long tracts of rich soil; but had the misfortune in his youth to fall under the power of forcery. Tatler.

So'rdine. } Italian.] A small pipe put into the mouth of a trumpet, to make it sound lower or shriller. Bailey.

So'rdid. adj. [fordidus, Lat.]

1. Foul; gross; filthy; dirty.

There Charon stands,
A fordid god; down from his hoary chin
A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.

2. [fordide, Fr.] Intellectually dirty; mean; vile; base.

Thou canst not those exceptions make,
Which vulgar fordid mortals take. Cowley.

It is strange, since the priest's office heretofore was always splendid, that it is now looked upon as a piece of religion, to make it low and fordid. South.

3. [fordide, Fr.] Covetous; niggardly.

He may be old,
And yet not fordid, who refuses gold. Denham.

If one should cease to be generous and charitable, because another is fordid and ungrateful, it would be much in the power of vice to extinguish christian virtues. L'Estrange.

So'rdidly. adv. [from fordid.] Meanly; poorly; covetously.

So'rdidness. n. f. [from fordid.]

1. Meanness; baseness.

I omit the madnesses of Caligula's delights, and the execrable fordidness of those of Tiberius. Cowley.

2. Nastiness; not neatness.

Providence deters people from sluttishness and fordidness, and provokes them to cleanliness. Ray.

Sore. n. f. [ſar, Sax. faur, Danish.] A place tender and painful; a place excoriated; an ulcer. It is not used of a wound, but of a breach of continuity, either long continued, or from internal cause: to be a fore, there must be an excoriation; a tumour or bruise is not called a fore before some disruption happen.

Let us hence provide
A salve for any fore that may betide. Shakspeare.

Receipts abound; but searching all thy store,
The best is still at hand, to launce the fore,
And cut the head; for, till the core be found,
The secret vice is fed and gathers ground. Dryden.

By these all fest'ring fores her councils heal,
Which time or has disclos'd or shall reveal. Dryden.

Lice and flies, which have a most wonderful instinct to find out convenient places for the hatching and nourishing of their young, lay their eggs upon fores. Bentley.

Sore. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Tender to the touch. It has sometimes of before the causal noun.

We can ne'er be sure,
Whether we pain or not endure;
And just so far are fore and griev'd,
As by the fancy is believ'd. Hudibras.

While fore of battle, while our wounds are green,
Why should we tempt the doubtful die again? Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had fore eyes: If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Locke.

2. Tender in the mind; easily vexed.

Malice and hatred are very fretting and vexatious, and apt to make our minds fore and uneasy; but he that can moderate these affections will find ease in his mind. Tillotson.

Laugh at your friends; and, if your friends are fore,
So much the better, you may laugh the more. Pope.

3. Violent with pain; afflictively vehement. See Sore, adverb.

Threescore and ten I can remember well,
Within the volume of which time I've seen
Hours dreadful and things strange; but this fore night
Hath trifled former knowings. Shakspeare.

I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be fore between that and my blood. Shakspeare.

My loins are filled with a fore disease; and there is no whole part in my body. Common Prayer.

Sore hath been their fight,
As likeliest was, when two such foes met arm'd. Milton.

Gentle lady, may thy grave
Peace and quiet ever have;
After this day's travel fore,
Sweet rest seize thee evermore. Milton.

They are determined to live up to the holy rule, though fore evils and great temporal inconveniencies should attend the discharge of their duty. Atterbury.

4. Criminal. Out of use.

To lapse in fulness
Is forer than to lye for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakspeare.

Sore. n. f. [from faur, French.]

The buck is called the first year a fawn; the second, a pricket; the third, a forel; and the fourth year, a fore. Shakspeare.

Sore. adv. [This the etymologists derive from feer, Dutch: but feer means only an intenseness of any thing; fore almost always includes pain.] With painful or dangerous vehemence; in a very painful degree; with afflictive violence or pertinacity. It is now little used.

Thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me fore. Common Prayer.

The knight then lightly leaping to the prey,
With mortal steel him smote again so fore,
That headless his unwieldy body lay. Fairy Queen.

He this and that, and each man's blow
Doth eye, defend, and shift, being laid to fore. Daniel.

Though iron hew and mangle fore,
Would wounds and bruises honour more. Hudibras

Distrust shook fore their minds. Milton.

So that, if Palamon were wounded fore,
Arcite was hurt as much. Dryden.

Sore sigh'd the knight, who this long sermon heard:
At length, considering all, his heart he chear'd. Dryden.

How, Didius, shall a Roman, fore repuls'd,
Greet your arrival to this distant isle?
How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions? A. Philips.

So'rehon. } n. f. [Irish and Scottish.] A
Sorn. } kind of arbitrary exaction or servile tenure, formerly in Scotland, as likewise in Ireland. Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers, by way of contempt called in the lowlands giliwitfitts, and lived on free quarters; so that ever since, when a person obtrudes himself upon another, stays at his house, and hangs upon him for bed and board, he is said to forn, or be a forner. Macbean

They exact upon them all kind of services; yea, and the very wild exactions, coigne, livery, and forehon; by which they poll and utterly undo the poor tenants and freeholders under them. Spenser.

So'rel. n. f. [diminutive of fore.]

The buck is called the first year a fawn, the second, a pricket; the third, a forel. Shakspeare.

So'rely. adv. [from fore.]

1. With a great degree of pain or distress.

Here's the smell of the blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh! oh! oh!—What a sigh is there! the heart is forely overcharged. Shakspeare.

Of the warrior train,
Though most were forely wounded, none were slain. Dryden.

2. With vehemence dangerous or afflictive.

I have done ill,
Of which I do accuse myself so forely,
That I will enjoy no more. Shakspeare.

So'reness. n. f. [from fore.] Tenderness of a hurt.

He that, whilst the forenefs of his late pangs of conscience remains, finds himself a little indisposed for sin, presently concludes repentance hath had its perfect work. Decay of Piety.

My foot began to swell, and the pain asswaged, though it left such a forenefs, that I could hardly suffer the clothes of my bed. Temple.

Sori'tes. n. f. [σωρείτης.] Properly a heap. An argument where one proposition is accumulated on another.

Chrysippus the Stoick invented a kind of argument, consisting of more than three propositions, which is called forites, or a heap. Watts.

Sorites is when several middle terms are chosen to connect one another successively in several propositions, till the last proposition connects its predicate with the first subject. Thus, All men of revenge have their souls often uneasy; uneasy souls are a plague to themselves; now to be one's own plague is folly in the extreme. Watts.

Soro'ricide. [foror and cædo.] The murder of a sister.

So'rrage. n. f. The blades of green wheat or barley. Dict.

So'rrance. n. f. [In farriery.] Any disease or sore in horses. Dict.

Of all roots of herbs the root of forel goes the farthest into the earth. It is a cold and acid herb, that loveth the earth, and is not much drawn by the sun. Bacon.

Acid austere vegetables contract and strengthen the fibres, as all kinds of forel, the virtues of which lie in acid astringent salt, a sovereign antidote against the putrescent bilious alkali. Arbuthnot.

So'rrily. adv. [from forry.] Meanly; despicably; wretchedly; pitiably.

Thy pipe, O Pan, shall help, though I sing forrily. Sidney.

So'rriness. n. f. [from forry.] Mean

nefs; wretchednefs; pitiablenefs; defpicablenefs.

So'rrow. n. f. [forg, Danifh.] Grief; pain for fomething paft; fadnefs; mourning. Sorrow is not commonly underftood as the effect of prefent evil, but of loft good.

Sorrow is uneafinefs in the mind, upon the thought of a good loft, which might have been enjoyed longer; or the fenfe of a prefent evil. Locke.

Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you;
That triumph thus upon my mifery! Shakfpeare.

A world of woe and forrow. Milton.

Some other hour I will to tears allow;
But, having you, can fhow no forrow now. Dryden.

To So'rrow. v. n. [faurgan, Gothick; ropʒian, Saxon.] To grieve; to be fad; to be dejected.

The miferable change, now at my end,
Lament nor forrow at. Shakfpeare.

Wherever forrow is, relief would be;
If you do forrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, your forrow and my grief
Were both extermin'd. Shakfpeare.

Now I rejoice, not that ye were made forry, but that ye forrowed to repentance. 2 Corinthians.

I neither fear to die, nor defire to live; and having maftered all grief in myfelf, I defire no man to forrow for me. Hayward.

Send them forth, though forrowing, yet in peace. Milton.

Sad the prince explores
The neighb'ring main, and forrowing treads the fhores. Pope.

So'rrowed. adj. [from forrow.] Accompanied with forrow. Out of ufe.

Now the publick body, which doth feldom
Play the recanter, feeling in itfelf
A lack of Timon's aid, hath fenfe withal
Of its own fall, retraining aid to Timon;
And fends forth us to make their forrowed tender. Shakfpeare

So'rrowful. adj. [forrow and full.]

1. Sad for fomething paft; mournful; grieving.

Bleffed are they which have been forrowful for all thy fcourges, for they fhall rejoice for thee, when they have feen all thy glory. Tobias.

2. Deeply ferious. Not in ufe.

Hannah faid, No, my lord, I am a woman of a forrowful fpirit: I have poured out my foul before the Lord. 1 Samuel.

3. Expreffing grief; accompanied with grief.

Your liberties and charters. Shakſpeare.

4. To discourse; to make mention.

Were such things here as we do ſpeak about?
Or have we eaten of the insane root,
That takes the reason prisoner? Shakſpeare.

Lot went out, and ſpake unto his sons in law.
Geneſis.

The fire you ſpeak of,
If any flames of it approach my fortunes,
I'll quench it not with water, but with ruin.
Ben Jonſon.

The scripture ſpeaks only of those to whom it
ſpeaks. Hammond

They could never be lost but by an universal deluge, which has been ſpoken to already. Tillotſ.
Lucan ſpeaks of a part of Cæsar's army, that came to him from the Leman-lake, in the beginning of the civil war. Addiſon.

Had Luther ſpoke up to this accusation, yet
Chrysostom's example would have been his defence. Atterbury.

1. A long weapon with a sharp point, used in thrusting or throwing; a lance.

Those brandishers of ſpeares,
From many cities drawn, are they that are our hinderers. Chapman.

Th' Ægyptian, like a hill, himself did rear,
Like some tall tree; upon it seem'd a ſpear. Cowley.

Nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both shield and ſpear. Milton.

The flying ſpear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

The rous'd-up lion, resolute and slow,
Advances full on the protended ſpear. Thomſon.

2. A lance, generally with prongs, to kill fish.

The borderers watching, until they be past up into some narrow creek, below them cast a strong corded net athwart the stream, with which, and their loud shouting, they stop them from retiring, until the ebb have abandoned them to the hunters mercy, who,
by an old custom, share them with such indifferency, as, if a woman with child be present, the babe in her womb is gratified with a portion: a point also observed by the ſpear hunters in taking of salmons.
Carew.

To SPEAR. v. a. [from the noun.] To kill or pierce with a spear.

To SPEAR. v. n. To shoot or sprout. This is commonly written ſpire.

A ſpecial idea is called by the schools a species.
Watts.

2. Particular; peculiar.

Most commonly with a certain ſpecial grace of her own, wagging her lips, and grinning instead of smiling. Sidney.

The several books of scripture, having had each some several occasion and particular purpose which caused them to be written, the contents thereof are according to the exigence of that ſpecial end whereunto they are intended. Hooker.

Of all men alive,
I never yet beheld that ſpecial face,
Which I could fancy more than any other. Shakſp.

Nought to vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some ſpecial good doth give.
Shakſpeare.

The fourth commandment, in respect of any one definite and ſpecial day of every week, was not simply and perpetually moral. Hale.

Our Saviour is represented every where in scripture as the ſpecial patron of the poor and the afflicted, and as laying their interest to heart more nearly than those of any other of his members. Atterbury.

3. Appropriate; designed for a particular purpose.

O'Neal, upon his marriage with a daughter of Kildare, was made denizen by a ſpecial act of parliament. Davies.

Such things are evident by natural light, which men of a mature age, in the ordinary use of their faculties, with the common help of mutual society, may know and be sufficiently assured of without the help of any ſpecial revelation. Wilkins.

4. Extraordinary; uncommon.

That which necessity of some ſpecial time doth cause to be enjoined, bindeth no longer than during that time, but doth afterward become free. Hooker.

The other scheme takes special care to attribute all the work of conversion to grace. Hammond.

Though our charity should be universal, yet as it cannot be actually exercised but on particular times, so it should be chiefly on special opportunities. Spratt.

He bore
A paunch of the same bulk before;
Which still he had a special care
To keep well cramm'd with thrifty fare. Hudibras.

5. Chief in excellence.

The king hath drawn
The special head of all the land together. Shakſp.

Where that and other ſpecialties are bound. Shakſ.

Speciality of rule hath been neglected. Shakſp.

When men were ſure, that, in caſe they reſted upon a bare contract without ſpeciality, the other party might wage his law, they would not reſt upon ſuch contracts without reducing the debt into a ſpeciality, which accorded many ſuits. Hale.

SPE'CIES. n. ſ. [ſpecies, Latin.]

1. A ſort; a ſubdiviſion of a general term.

A ſpecial idea is called by the ſchools a ſpecies; it is one common nature that agrees to ſeveral ſingular individual beings: ſo horſe is a ſpecial idea or ſpecies, as it agrees to Bucephalus, Trot and Snowbull. Watts.

2. Claſs of nature; ſingle order of beings.

He intendeth the care of ſpecies or common natures, but letteth looſe the guard of individuals or ſingle exiſtencies. Brown.

The Phœnix Pindar is a whole ſpecies alone. Cowley.

For we are animals no leſs,
Although of different ſpecies. Hudibras.

Thou nam'ſt a race that muſt proceed from me,
Yet my whole ſpecies in myſelf I ſee. Dryden.

A mind of ſuperior or meaner capacities than human, would conſtitute a different ſpecies, though united to a human body in the ſame laws of connexion: and a mind of human capacities would make another ſpecies, if united to a different body in different laws of connexion. Bentley.

3. Appearance to the ſenſes; any viſible or ſenſible repreſentation.

An apparent diverſity between the ſpecies viſible and audible is, that the viſible doth not mingle in the medium, but the audible doth. Bacon.

It is a moſt certain rule, how much any body hath of colour, ſo much hath it of opacity, and by ſo much the more unfit it is to tranſmit the ſpecies. Ray.

The ſpecies of the letters illuminated with blue, were nearer to the lens than thoſe illuminated with deep red, by about three inches, or three and a quarter; but the ſpecies of the letters illuminated with indigo and violet appeared ſo confuſed and indiſtinct, that I could not read them. Newton.

4. Repreſentation to the mind.

Wit in the poet, or wit-writing, is no other than the faculty of imagination in the writer, which ſearches over all the memory for the ſpecies or ideas of thoſe things which it deſigns to repreſent. Dryden.

5. Show; viſible exhibition. Not in uſe; and perhaps, in the following quotation, miſprinted for ſpectacles.

Shews and ſpecies ſerve beſt with the people. Bacon.

7. Simples that have place in a compound medicine.

SPECI'FICAL. } adj. [ſpecifique, Fr. ſpecies
SPECI'FICK. } and facio, Lat.]

1. That makes a thing of the ſpecies of which it is.

That thou to truth the perfect way may'ſt know,
To thee all her ſpecifick forms I'll ſhow. Denham.

The underſtanding, as to the exerciſe of this power, is ſubject to the command of the will, though, as to the ſpecifick nature of its acts, it is determined by the object. South.

By whoſe direction is the nutriment ſo regularly diſtributed into the reſpective parts, and how are they kept to their ſpecifick uniformities? Glanville.

Theſe principles I conſider not as occult qualities, ſuppoſed to reſult from the ſpecifick forms of things, but as general laws of nature, by which the things themſelves are formed; their truth appearing to us by phænomena, though their cauſes be not yet diſcovered. Newton.

As all things were formed according to theſe ſpecifical platforms, ſo their truth muſt be meaſured from their conformity to them. Norris.

Specifick gravity is the appropriate and peculiar gravity or weight which any ſpecies of natural bodies have, and by which they are plainly diſtinguiſhable from all other bodies of different kinds. Quincy.

The ſpecifick qualities of plants reſide in their native ſpirit, oil, and eſſential ſalt: for the water, fixt ſalt, and earth, appear to be the ſame in all plants. Arbuthnot.

Specifick difference is that primary attribute which diſtinguiſhes each ſpecies from one another, while they ſtand ranked under the ſame general nature or genus. Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit, yet this is but a general or generick difference; for it does not diſtinguiſh wine from cyder or perry: the ſpecifick difference of wine therefore is its preſſure from the grape; as cyder is preſſed from apples, and perry from pears. Watts.

2. [In medicine.] Appropriated to the cure of ſome particular diſtemper. It is uſually applied to the arcana, or medicines that work by occult qualities.

The operation of purging medicines has been referred to a hidden propriety, a ſpecifical virtue, and the like ſhifts of ignorance. Bacon.

If ſhe would drink a good decoction of ſaſſa, with the uſual ſpecificks, ſhe might enjoy a good health. Wiſeman.

SPECI'FICALLY. adv. [from ſpecifick.] In ſuch a manner as to conſtitute a ſpecies; according to the nature of the ſpecies.

His faith muſt be not only living, but lively too; it muſt be put into a poſture by a particular exerciſe of thoſe ſeveral virtues that are ſpecifically requiſite to a due performance of this duty. South.

Human reaſon doth not only gradually, but ſpecifically, differ from the ſantaſtick reaſon of brutes, which have no conceit of truth, as an aggregate of divers ſimple conceits, nor of any other univerſal. Grew.

He muſt allow that bodies were endowed with the ſame affections then as ever ſince; and that, if an axe head be ſuppoſed to float upon water, which is ſpecifically lighter, it had been ſupernatural. Bentley.

To SPECI'FICATE. v. a. [from ſpecies and facio, Lat.] To mark by notation of diſtinguiſhing particularities.

Man, by the inſtituted law of his creation, and the common influence of the divine goodneſs, is enabled to act as a reaſonable creature, without any particular, ſpecificating, concurrent, new impreſſive act of the divine ſpecial providence. Hale.

SPECIFICA'TION. n. ſ. [from ſpecifick; ſpecification, Fr.]

1. Diſtinct notion; determination by a peculiar mark.

This ſpecification or limitation of the queſtion hinders the diſputers from wandering away from the preciſe point of enquiry. Watts.

2. Particular mention.

The conſtitution here ſpeaks generally, without the ſpecification of any place. Ayliffe.

To SPE'CIFY. v. a. [from ſpecies; ſpecifier, French.] To mention; to ſhow by ſome particular mark of diſtinction.

As the change of ſuch laws as have been ſpecified is neceſſary, ſo the evidence that they are ſuch muſt be great. Hooker.

St. Peter doth not ſpecify what theſe waters were. Burnet.

He has there given us an exact geography of Greece, where the countries, and the uſes of their ſoils, are ſpecified. Pope.

The reſt, far greater part,
Will deem in outward rites and ſpecious forms
Religion ſatisfied. Milton.

She next I took to wife,
O that I never had! found will too late!
Was in the vale of Sorec, Dalila,
That ſpecious monſter, my accompliſh'd ſnare. Milton.

2. Plauſible; ſuperficially, not ſolidly right; ſtriking at firſt view.

Bad men boaſt
Their ſpecious deeds on earth which glory excites,
Or cloſe ambition varniſh'd o'er with zeal. Milton.

Somewhat of ſpecious they muſt have to recommend themſelves to princes; for folly will not eaſily go down in its natural form. Dryden.

Temptation is of greater danger, becauſe it is covered with the ſpecious names of good nature and good manners. Rogers.

This is the only ſpecious objection which our Romiſh adverſaries urge againſt the doctrine of this church in the point of celibacy. Atterbury.

SPE'CIOUSLY. adv. [from ſpecious.] With fair appearance.

Piety is oppoſed to hypocriſy and inſincerity, eſpecially to that perſonated devotion under which any kind of impiety is wont to be diſguiſed, and put off more ſpeciouſly. Hammond.

SPECK. n. ſ. [ſpecce, Saxon.] A ſmall diſcoloration; a ſpot.

Every ſpeck does not blind a man. Government of the Tongue.

Then are they happy, when
No ſpeck is left of their habitual ſtains;
But the pure æther of the ſoul remains. Dryden.

To SPECK. v. a. To ſpot; to ſtain in drops.

Flow'r
Carnation, purple, azure, or ſpeck'd with gold. Milton.

SPE'CKLE. n. ſ. [from ſpeck.] Small ſpeck; little ſpot.

To SPE'CKLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with ſmall ſpots.

So dreadfully he towards him did paſs,
Forelifting up aloft his ſpeckled breaſt,
And often bounding on the bruiſed graſs,
As for great joy of his new comen gueſt. Fairy Queen.

Speckled vanity
Will ſicken ſoon and die,
And leprous ſin will melt from earthly mould. Milton.

Saw'ſt thou not late a ſpeckled ſerpent rear
His gilded ſpires to climb on yon fair tree?
Before this happy minute I was he. Dryden.

The ſmiling infant in his hand ſhall take
The creſted baſiliſk and ſpeckled ſnake;
Pleas'd the green luſtre of the ſcales ſurvey,
And with their forky tongue and pointleſs ſting ſhall play. Pope.

The tortoiſe here and elephant unite,
Transform'd to combs, the ſpeckled and the white.
Pope.

Such ſpectacles, though they are juſt, are ſad.
Denham.

3. [In the plural.] Glaſſes to aſſiſt the ſight.

The ſixth age ſhifts
Into the lean and ſlipper'd pantaloon,
With ſpectacles on noſe, and pouch on ſide. Shakſ.

We have helps for ſight above ſpectacles and glaſſes. Bacon.

Shakſpeare was naturally learned: he needed not the ſpectacles of books to read nature; he looked inwards and found her there. Dryden.

The firſt ſpectacle-maker did not think that he was leading the way to the diſcovery of new planets. Grew.

This is the reaſon of the decay of ſight in old men, and ſhews why their ſight is mended by ſpectacles. Newton.

This day then let us not be told,
That you are ſick, and I grown old;
Nor think on our approaching ills,
And talk of ſpectacles and pills. Swift.

SPE'CTACLED. adj. [from the noun.] Furniſhed with ſpectacles.

All tongues ſpeak of him, and the bleared ſights
Are ſpectacled to ſee him. Shakſpeare.

1. To make haste; to move with celerity.

So well they sped, that they be come at length
Unto the place whereas the Paynim lay
Devoid of outward sense and native strength,

Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? Have I, in my poor and cold motion, the expedition of thought? I speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility. Shakspeare.

If pray'rs
Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard. Milt.

See where Idwall speeds! a trusty soldier. A. Philips.

2. [ſpeðian, to grow rich, Sax.] To have good success.

Timon is shrunk, indeed;
And he, that's once denied, will hardly speed. Shakspeare.

Now if this suit lay in Bianca's pow'r,
How quickly should you speed. Shakspeare.

When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell,
I told you then he should prevail, and speed
In his bad errand. Milton.

3. To succeed well or ill.

Make me not sighted like the basilisk:
I've look'd on thousands, who have sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Shakspeare.

Macicaus shewed them what an offence it was rashly to depart out of the city, which might be unto them dangerous, although they should speed never so well. Knolles.

These were violators of the first temple; and those that profaned and abused the second, sped no better. South.

Not to proceed. Dryden.

SPE'EDINESS. n. s. [from speedy.] The quality of being speedy.

SPE'EDWELL. n. s. [veronica, Latin.] A plant; fluellin.

In a scarcity in Silesia a rumour was spread of its raining millet seed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit. Derham.

SPE'EDY. adj. [from speed.] Quick; swift; nimble; quick of dispatch.

How near's the other army?
—Near, and on speedy foot: the main descry
Stands on the hourly thought. Shakspeare.

Back with speediest sail
Zophiel, of cherubim the swiftest wing,
Came flying. Milton.

Let it be enough what thou hast done,
When spotted deaths ran arm'd through ev'ry street,
With poison'd darts, which not the good could shun,
The speedy could outfly, or valiant meet. Dryden.

SPEIGHT. n. s. [picus martius, Latin.] A bird.

SPELL. n. s. [ſpel, Saxon, a word.]

1. A charm consisting of some words of occult power. Thus Horace uses words:

Sunt verba & voces quibus hunc lenire dolorem
Possis.

Start not; her actions shall be holy:
You hear my spell is lawful: do not shun her,
Until you see her die again; for then
You kill her double. Shakspeare.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations, letters, characters, notes, and dashes. Brown.

Thou durst not thus disparage glorious arms,
Had not spells
And black enchantments, some magician's art,
Arm'd thee or charm'd thee strong. Milton.

Begin, begin; the mystick spell prepare. Milton.

Yourself you so excel,
When you vouchsafe to breathe my thought,
That like a spirit, with this spell
Of my own teaching I am caught. Waller.

Mild Lucina
Then reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throes,
And spoke the pow'rful spells that babes to birth disclose. Dryden.

2. A turn of work; a vicissitude of labour. A low word.

Their toil is so extreme as they cannot endure above four hours in a day, but are succeeded by spells: the residue of the time they wear out at coytes and kayles. Carew.

To SPELL. v. a. pret. and part. pass. spelled or spelt. [spellen, Dutch.]

1. To write with the proper letters.

In the criticism of spelling, the word satire ought to be with i, and not with y; and if this be so, then it is false spelled throughout. Dryden.

2. To read by naming letters singly.

I never yet saw man,
How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featur'd,
But she would spell him backward; if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister. Shakspeare.

3. To charm.

I have you fast:
Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if they can gain your liberty. Shakspeare.

This, gather'd in the planetary hour,
With noxious weeds, and spell'd with words of pow'r,
Dire stepdames in the magic bowl infuse. Dryden.

To SPELL. v. n.

1. To form words of letters.

What small knowledge was, in them did dwell,
And he a god, who could but read or spell. Dryden.

By pasting on the vowels and consonants on the sides of four dice, he has made this a play for his children, whereby his eldest son in coats has played himself into spelling. Locke.

The Latin being written of the same character with the mother tongue, by the assistance of a spelling book it is legible. Spectator.

Another cause, which hath maimed our language, is a foolish opinion that we ought to spell exactly as we speak. Swift.

2. To read.

If I read aught in heaven,
Or heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars,
Voluminous or single characters,
In their conjunction met, give me to spell,
Sorrows and labours, opposition, hate,
Attend thee. Milton.

When gowns, not arms, repell'd
The fierce Epirote and the African bold,
Whether to settle peace, or to unfold
The drift of hollow states, hard to be spell'd. Milton.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heav'n doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew. Milton.

3. To read unskilfully.

As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion; a rude unwritten blank, sent into the [illegible] world only to read and ſpell out a God in the works of creation. South

To SPELT. v. n. To ſplit; to break. A bad word.

Feed geeſe with oats, ſpelted beans, barley meal, or ground malt mixed with beer. Mortimer.

SPE'LTER. n. ſ. A kind of ſemimetal.

Metals in fuſion do not flame, for want of a copious fume; except ſpelter, which fumes copiouſly, and thereby flames. Newton.

To SPEND. v. a. [ſpendan, Saxon; ſpendere, Italian.]

1. To conſume; to exhauſt; to waſte.

Our cannons malice vainly ſhall be ſpent
Againſt th' invulnerable clouds. Shakſpeare.

There is oil in the dwelling of the wiſe, but a fooliſh man ſpendeth it up. Proverbs.

We muſt exaſperate
The almighty Victor to ſpend all his rage. Milton.

Money is brought into England by nothing but ſpending here leſs of foreign commodities than what we carry to market can pay for. Locke.

2. To beſtow, as expenſe; to expend, as coſt.

Wherefore do ye ſpend money for that which is not bread? Iſaiah.

3. To beſtow for any purpoſe: often with upon.

When we can intreat an hour to ſerve,
Would ſpend it in ſome words upon that buſineſs,
If you would grant the time. Shakſpeare.

Eleutherius, perceiving that he was unwilling to ſpend any more time upon the debate, thought not fit to make any mention to him of the propoſed opinion. Boyle.

4. To effuſe.

Coward dogs
Moſt ſpend their mouths, when what they ſeem to threaten Runs far before them. Shakſpeare.

5. To ſquander; to laviſh.

The whole of our reflections terminate in this, what courſe we are to take to paſs our time; ſome to get, and others to ſpend, their eſtates. Wake.

6. To paſs; to ſuffer to paſs away.

In thoſe paſtoral paſtimes a great many days were ſpent, to follow their flying predeceſſors. Sidney.

They ſpend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave. Job.

He ſpends his life with his wife, and remember neither father nor mother. 1 Eſdras.

Say, for you ſaw us, ye immortal lights!
How oft unweary'd have we ſpent the nights,
Till the Ledæan ſtars, ſo fam'd for love,

When he was of riper years, for his father accompliſhment, he ſpent a conſiderable part of his time in travelling. Pope.

7. To waſte; to wear out; to exhauſt of force.

The waves aſcended and deſcended, till their force being ſpent by degrees, they ſettled at reſt. Burnet.

They bend their bows, they whirl their ſlings around,
Heaps of ſpent arrows fall, and ſtrew the ground. Dryden.

The winds are rais'd, the ſtorm blows high;
Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up
In its full fury, and direct it right,
Till it has ſpent itſelf on Cato's head. Addiſon.

8. To fatigue; to haraſs.

Nothing but only the hope of ſpoil did relieve them, having ſcarce clothes to cover their nakedneſs, and their bodies ſpent with long labour and [illegible]. Knolles.

Or come your ſhipping in our ports to lay,
Spent and diſabled in ſo long a way? Dryden.

Our walls are thinly mann'd, our beſt men ſlain;
The reſt, an heartleſs number, ſpent with watching,
And haraſs'd out with duty. Dryden.

Some ſpent with toil, ſome with deſpair oppreſs'd,
Leap'd headlong from the heights; the flames conſum'd the reſt. Dryden.

Thou oft haſt ſeen me
Wreſtling with vice and faction; now thou ſee'ſt me
Spent, overpower'd, deſpairing of ſucceſs. Addiſon.

To SPEND. v. n.

1. To make expenſe.

Henceforth your tongue muſt ſpend at leſſer rate,
Than in its flames to wrap a nation's fate. Dryden.

The ſon, bred in ſloth, becomes a ſpendthrift, a profligate, and goes out of the world a beggar. Swift.

SPE'RABLE. adj. [ſperabilis, Lat.] Such as may be hoped. Not in uſe.

We may caſt it away, if it be found but a bladder, and diſcharge it of ſo much as is vain and not ſperable. Bacon.

SPERM. n. ſ. [ſperme, Fr. ſperma, Lat.] Seed; that by which the ſpecies is continued.

Some creatures bring forth many young ones at a burthen, and ſome but one; this may be cauſed by the quantity of ſperm required, or by the partitions of the womb which may ſever the ſperm. Bacon.

There is required to the preparation of the ſperm of animals a great apparatus of veſſels, many ſecretions, concoctions, reflections, and circulations. Ray.

SPERMACETI. n. ſ. [Lat.] Corruptedly pronounced parmacitty.

A particular ſort of whale affords the oil whence this is made, and that is very improperly called ſperma, becauſe it is only the oil which comes from the head of which it can be made: it is changed from what it is naturally, the oil itſelf being very brown and rank. The peculiar property of it is, to ſhoot into flakes, not much unlike the cryſtallization of ſalts, but in this ſtate 'tis yellow, and has a certain rankneſs, from which it is freed by ſqueezing it between warm metalline plates: at length it becomes perfectly pure, inodorous, flaky, ſmooth, white, and in ſome meaſure tranſparent. Quincy.

SPERMA'TICAL. } adj. [ſpermatique, Fr.
SPERMA'TICK. } from ſperm.]

1. Seminal; conſiſting of ſeed.

The primordials of the world are not mechanical, but ſpermatical or vital. More.

Metals and ſundry meteors rude ſhapes have no need of any particular principle of life, or ſpermatical form, diſtinct from the reſt or motion of the particles of the matter. More.

2. Belonging to the ſperm; containing ſperm.

The moiſture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the ſpermatical veſſels. Bacon.

Two different ſexes muſt concur to their generation: there is in both a great apparatus of ſpermatick veſſels, wherein the more ſpirituous part of the blood is by many digeſtions and circulations exalted into ſperm. Ray.

To SPE'RMATIZE. v. n. [from ſperm.] To yield ſeed.

Ariſtotle affirming that women do not ſpermatize, and confer a receptacle, rather than eſſential principles of generation, deductively includes both ſexes in mankind. Brown.

SPERMATOCE'LE. n. ſ. [σπέρμα and κήλη.] A rupture cauſed by the contraction of the ſeminal veſſels, and the ſemen falling into the ſcrotum. Bailey.

Myſterious dame,
That ne'er art call'd but when the dragon womb
Of Stygian darkneſs ſpets her thickeſt gloom,
And makes one blot of all the air,
Stop thy cloudy ebon chair. Milton.

To SPEW. v. a. [ſpepan, Sax. ſpouwen, Dutch.]

1. To vomit; to eject from the ſtomach.

A ſwordfiſh ſmall him from the reſt did ſunder,
That in his throat him pricking ſoftly under
His wide abyſs, him forced forth to ſpew,
That all the ſea did roar like heaven's thunder,
And all the waves were ſtain'd with filthy hue. Spenſer.

2. To eject; to caſt forth.

When earth with ſlime and mud is cover'd o'er,
Or hollow places ſpew their wat'ry ſtore. Dryden.

When yellow ſands are ſifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden ſhow;
And when the fouler bottom ſpews the black,
The Stygian dye the tainted waters take. Dryden.

3. To eject with loathing.

Keep my ſtatutes, and commit not any of theſe abominations, that the land ſpew not you out. Leviticus.

Contentious ſuits ought to be ſpewed out, as the ſurfeit of courts. Bacon.

To SPEW. v. n. To vomit; to eaſe the ſtomach.

He could have hiſs'd in
The ſtrand ends, and the nares of the rim:
I'd better loſe all that they ſhould keep or ſpew,
Then in the ſcene to offend or humour you. Jonſon.

SPE'WY. adj. [from ſpew.] Wet; foggy. A provincial word.

The lower valleys in wet winters are ſo ſpewy, that they know not how to feed them. Mortimer.

Ye know the spheres and various tasks assign'd
By laws eternal to th' aetherial kind. Pope.
The hermit's pray'r permitted, not approv'd;
Soon in an higher sphere Eulogius mov'd. Harte.

To SPHERE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To place in a sphere.
The glorious planet Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and spher'd
Amidst the rest, whose med'cinable eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil. Shakspeare.
2. To form into roundness.
Light from her native east
To journey through the airy gloom began,
Spher'd in a radiant cloud; for yet the sun
Was not. Milton.

SPHE'RICAL. } adj. [sphærique, Fr. from SPHE'RICK. } sphere.
1. Round; orbicular; globular.
What descent of waters could there be in a spherical and round body, wherein there is nor high nor low? Raleigh.
Though sounds spread round, so that there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they go farthest in the forelines from the first local impulsion of the air. Bacon.
By discernment of the moisture drawn up in vapours, we must know the reason of the spherical figures of the drops. Glanville.
A fluid must necessarily falls into a spherical surface. Keil.
Where the central nodule was globular, the inner surface of the first crust would be spherick, and if the crust was in all parts of the same thickness, that whole crust would be spherical. Woodward.
2. Planetary; relating to the orbs of the planets.
We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains by spherical predominance. Shakspeare.

Think what they have done,
And then run stark mad; for all
Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it. Shakspeare.
It containeth singular relations, not without some spice or sprinkling of all learning. Brown.
So in the wicked there's no vice,
Of which the Saints have not a spice. Hudibras.

To SPICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To season with spice; to mix with aromatick bodies.
His mother was a votress of my order,
And in the spiced Indian air by night
Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shakspeare
With a festival
She 'll first receive thee; but will spice thy bread
With flowrie poysons. Chapman.
These hymns may work on future wits, and so
May great grandchildren of thy praises grow;
And so, though not revive, embalm and spice
The world, which else would putrify with vice. Donne.
What though some have a fraught
Of cloves and nutmegs, and in cinnamon sail,
If thou hast wherewithal to spice a draught,
When griefs prevail? Herbert.

SPI'CER. n. s. [from spice.] One who deals in spice.
Names have been derived from occupations: as Salter and Spicer. Camden.

SPI'CERY. n. s. [espiceries, Fr. from spice.]
1. The commodity of spices.
Their camels were loaden with spicery, and balm and myrrh. Raleigh.
She in whose body
The western treasure, eastern spicery,
Europe and Africk, and the unknown rest,
Were easily found. Donne.
2. A repository of spices.
The spicery, the cellar and its furniture, are too well known to be here insisted upon. Addison.

SPICK and SPAN. [This word I should not have expected to have found authorized by a polite writer. Span-new is used by Chaucer, and is supposed to come from spannan, to stretch, Saxon; expandere, Latin; whence span. Span-new is therefore originally used of cloth newly extended or dressed at the clothiers, and spick and span is newly extended on the spikes or tenters: it is however a low word.] Quite new; now first used.
While the honour thou hast got
In spick and span new, piping hot,
Strike her up bravely. Butler.
They would have these reduced to nothing, and then others created spick and span new out of nothing. Burnet.
I keep no antiquated stuff;
But spick and span I have enough. Swift.

SPI'KENEL or Spignel. n. s. [meum, Lat.] The herb maldmony or bearwort. Dict.

SPICO'SITY. n. s. [spica, Lat.] The quality of being spiked like ears of corn; fulness of ears. Dict.

SPI'CY. adj. [from spice.]
1. Producing spice; abounding with aromaticks.
Off at sea north-east winds blow
Sabæan odour, from the spicy shore
Of Araby the blest: with such delay
Well pleas'd they slack their course; and many a league,
Cheer'd with the grateful smell, old ocean smiles. Milton.
For them the Idumæan balm did sweat,
And in hot Ceilon spicy forests grew. Dryden.
2. Aromatick; having the qualities of spice.
The regimen in this disease ought to be of spicy and cephalick vegetables, to dispel the viscosity Arbuthnot.
Under southern skies exalt their sails,
Led by new stars, and borne by spicy gales! Pope.

SPI'DER. n. s. [Skinner thinks this word softened from spinder, or spinner, from spin: Junius, with his usual felicity, dreams that it comes from σπιζω, to extend; for the spider extends his web. Perhaps it comes from spieden, Dutch, speyden, Danish, to spy, to be upon the catch. Dop, bopa, Saxon, is a beetle, or properly a humble bee, or stinglefs bee. May not spider be spy dor, the insect that watches the dor?] The animal that spins a web for flies.
More direful hap betide that hated wretch,
Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads. Spenser.
The spider's web to watch we'll stand,
And, when it takes the bee,
We'll help out of the tyrant's hand
The innocent to free. Denham.
Insidious, restless, watchful spider,
Fear no officious damsel's broom,
Extend thy artful fabrick wider,
And spread thy hangers round my room:
While I thy curious fabrick stare at,
And think on hapless poet's fate,
Like thee confin'd to noisome garret.
And rudely banish'd rooms of state. D. Lucas.
The spider's touch how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line. Pope.

SPI'DERCATCHER. n. s. [from spider and catcher; picus muravius, Lat.] A bird.

SPI'DERWORT. n. s. [phalangium, Latin.] A plant with a lily-flower, composed of six petals.

SPI'GOT. n. s. [spijcker, Dut.] A pin or peg put into the faucet to keep in the liquor.

Base Hungarian wight, wilt thou the spigot wield? Shakspeare.

Take out the spigot, and clap the point in your mouth. Swift.

SPIKE. n. s. [spica, Latin.]

1. An ear of corn.

Drawn up in ranks and files, the bearded spikes
Guard it from birds, as with a stand of pikes. Denham.

Suffering not the yellow beards to rear,
He tramples down the spikes, and intercepts the year. Dryden.

The gleaners,
Spike after spike, their sparing harvest pick. Thomson.

2. A long nail of iron or wood; a long rod of iron sharpened: so called from its similitude to an ear of corn.

For the body of the ships, no nation equals England for the oaken timber; and we need not borrow of any other iron for spikes, or nails to fasten them. Bacon.

The head of your medal would be seen to more advantage, if it were placed on a spike of the tower. Dryden.

He wears on his head the corona radiata, another type of his divinity: the spikes that shoot out represent the rays of the sun. Addison.

SPIKE. n. s. A smaller species of lavender.

The oil of spike is much used by our artificers in their varnishes; but it is generally adulterated. Hill.

To SPIKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with long nails.

Lay long planks upon them, pinned or spiked down to the pieces of oak on which they lie. Moxon.

Lay long planks upon them, spiking or pinning them down fast. Mortimer.

A youth, leaping over the spiked pales, was suddenly frighted down, and in his falling he was catched by those spikes. Wiseman.

3. To make sharp at the end.

SPI'KENARD. n. s. [spica nardi, Lat.] A plant; and the oil or balsam produced from the plant.

It grows plentifully in Java. It has been known to the medical writers of all ages. Hill.

A woman, having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, brake and poured it on his head. Mark.

He cast into the pile bundles of myrrh, and sheaves of spikenard, enriching it with every spicy shrub. Spectator.

SPILL. n. s. [spylen, Dutch.]

A small shiver of wood, or thin bar of iron.

The oysters, besides gathering by hand, have a peculiar dredge, which is a thick strong net, fastened to three spills of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern. Carew.

Have near the bunghole a little venthole, stopped with a spill. Mortimer.

A small quantity of money. I know not whence derived.

The bishops, who consecrated this ground, were wont to have a spill or sportule from the credulous laity. Ayliffe.

To SPILL. v. a. [spillan, Saxon; spillen, Dutch; spilla, Islandick.]

To shed; to lose by shedding.

Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt. Shakspeare.

Friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another. Shakspeare.

Themselves exact their cruelty,
And I constrained am this blood to spill. Daniel.

They having spill'd much blood, and done much waste,
Subduing nations; and achiev'd thereby
Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey;
Shall change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth. Milton.

Medea must not draw her murth'ring knife,
And spill her children's blood upon the stage. Roscommon.

Our fathers did disgrace
With treacherous deeds our mighty mother's race;
And to revenge his blood, so justly spilt,
What is it less than to partake his guilt? Dryden.

Not the Centaur's tale
Be here repeated; how, with lust and wine
Inflam'd, they fought and spilt their drunken souls
At feasting hour. Philips.

2. To destroy; to mischief.

Thus is our thought with pain of thistle tilled;
Thus be our noblest parts dried up with sorrow;
Thus is our mind with too much minding spilled. Sidney.

Why are you so fierce and cruel?
Is it because your eyes have power to kill?
Then know that mercy is the Mighty's jewel,
And greater glory think to save than spill. Spenser.

Thou all-shaking thunder,
Crack nature's mould, all germins spill at once
That make ingrateful man. Shakspeare.

Be not angry with these fires;
For then their threats will kill me:
Nor look too kind on my desires;
For then my hopes will spill me. Ben Jonson.

All bodies are with other bodies fill'd;
But she receives both heav'n and earth together.
Nor are their forms by rash encounters spill'd;
For there they stand, and neither toucheth either. Davies.

3. To throw away.

This fight shall damp the raging ruffian's breast,
The poison spill, and half-drawn sword arrest. Tickel.

To SPILL. v. n.

1. To waste; to be lavish.

Thy father bids thee spare, and chides for spilling. Sidney.

2. To be shed; to be lost by being shed.

He was so topfull of himself, that he let it spill on all the company: he spoke well indeed, but he spoke too long. Watts.

SPI'LLER. n. s. [I know not whence derived.] A kind of fishing line.

In harbour they are taken by spillers made of a cord, to which divers shorter are tied at a little distance, and to each of these a hook is fastened with a bait: this spiller they sink in the sea where those fishes have their accustomed haunts. Carew.

SPILTH. n. s. [from spill.] Any thing poured out or wasted.

Our vaults have wept with drunken spilth of wine. Shakspeare.

To SPIN. v. a. pret. spun or span; part. spun. [spinnan, Saxon; spinnen, Dut.]

1. To draw out into threads.

The women spun goats hair. Exodus.

2. To form threads by drawing out and twisting any filamentous matter.

You would be another Penelope, yet all the yarn she spun, in Ulysses's absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Shakspeare.

The fates but only spin the coarser clue,
The finest of the wool is left for you. Dryden.

3. To protract; to draw out.

By one delay after another, they spin out their whole lives, till there's no more future left before 'em. L'Estrange.

Why should Rome fall a moment ere her time?
No, let us draw her term of freedom out
In its full length, and spin it to the last. Addison.

4. To form by degrees; to draw out tediously.

I passed lightly over many particulars, on which learned and witty men might spin out large volumes. Digby.

If his cure lies among the lawyers, let nothing be said against entangling property, spinning out causes, and squeezing clients. Collier.

Men of large thoughts and quick apprehensions are not to expect any thing here, but what, being spun out of my own coarse thoughts, is fitted to men of my own size. Locke.

The lines are weak, another's pleas'd to say;
Lord Fanny spins a thousand such a day. Pope.

5. To put into a turning motion, as a boy's top.

To SPIN. v. n.

1. To exercise the art of spinning, or drawing threads.

We can fling our legs and arms upwards and downwards, backwards, forwards, and round, as they that spin. More.

Ten thousand stalks their various blossoms spread;
Peaceful and lowly in their native soil,
They neither know to spin, nor care to toil. Prior.

For this Alcides learn'd to spin;
His club laid down, and lion's skin. Prior.

2. [spingare, Italian.] To stream out in a thread or small current.

Together furiously they ran,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The blood out of their helmets span,
So sharp were their encounters. Drayton.

3. To move round as a spindle.

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,
Rise on the earth, or earth rise on the sun;
He from the east his flaming road begin,
Or she from west her silent course advance
With inoffensive pace, that spinning sleeps
On her soft axle, while she paces ev'n
And bears thee soft with the smooth air along.
Solicit not thy thoughts. Milton.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands, it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.

SPI'NACH. } n. s. [spinachia, Lat.] A
SPI'NAGE. } plant.

It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many stamina included in the flower-cup, which are produced in spikes upon the male plants, which are barren; but the embryos are produced from the wings of the leaves on the female plants, which afterward become roundish or angular seeds, which, in some sorts have thorns adhering to them. Miller.

Spinage is an excellent herb, crude or boiled. Mortimer.

SPI'NAL. adj. [spina, Lat.] Belonging to the backbone.

All spinal, or such as have no ribs, but only a back bone, are somewhat analogous thereto. Brown.

Those solids are entirely nervous, and proceed from the brain and spinal marrow, which by their bulk appear sufficient to furnish all the stamina or threads of the solid parts. Arbuthnot.

Descending careless from his couch, the fall
Lux'd his joint neck, and spinal marrow bruis'd. Philips.

SPI'NDLE. n. s. [spindl, spindel, Sax.]

1. The pin by which the thread is formed, and on which it is conglomerated.

Bodies fibrous by moisture incorporate with other thread, especially if there be a little wreathing; as appeareth by the twisting of thread, and twirling about of spindles. Bacon.

Sing to those that hold the vital sheers,
And turn the adamantine spindle round
On which the fate of gods and men is wound. Milton.

Upon a true repentance, God is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute reprobation, as not to keep his promise, and seal merciful pardons. Jasper Maine.

So Pallas from the dusty field withdrew,
And, when imperial Jove appear'd in view,
Resum'd her female arts, the spindle and the clew,
Forgot the sceptre she so well had sway'd,
And, with that mildness she had rul'd, obey'd. Stepney.

Do you take me for a Roman matron,
Bred tamely to the spindle and the loom? A. Philips.

2. A long slender stalk.

The spindles must be tied up, and, as they grow in height, rods set by them, lest by their bending they should break. Mortimer.

3. Any thing slender. In contempt.

Repose yourself, if those spindle legs of yours will carry you to the next chair. Dryden.

The marriage of one of our heiresses with an eminent courtier, gave us spindle shanks and cramps. Tatler.

To SPI'NDLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into a long small stalk.

Another ill accident in drought is the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; insomuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon.

When the flowers begin to spindle, all but one or two of the biggest, at each joint, should be nipped off. Mortimer.

SPI'NDLESHA'NKED. adj. [spindle and shank.] Having small legs.

Her lawyer is a little rivelled, spindle-shanked gentleman. Addison.

His head
Crested aloft, and carbuncle his eyes;
With burnish'd neck of verdant gold, erect
Amidst his circling spires, that on the grass
Floated redundant. Milton.

A dragon's fiery form belied the god,
Sublime on radiant spires he rode. Dryden.

An ferns to consist of spires contorted into small spheres, through the interstices of which the particles of light may freely pass; it is light, the solid substance of the spires being very small in proportion to the spaces they take up. Cheyne.

2. Any thing growing up taper; a round pyramid, so called, perhaps, because a line drawn round and round in less and less circles would be a spire; a steeple.

With glist'ring spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton.

He cannot make one spire of grass more or less than he hath made. Hale.

These pointed fires that wound the ambient sky,
Inglorious change! shall in destruction lie. Prior.

3. The top or uppermost point.

'Twere no less than a traducement to silence, that
Which to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modest. Shakspeare.

To SPIRE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shoot up pyramidically.

It is not so apt to spire up as the other sorts, being more inclined to branch into arms. Mortimer.

2. [spiro, Lat.] To breathe. Not in use. Spenser.

SPI'RIT. n. s. [spiritus, Lat.]

1. Breath; wind.

All purges have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach. Bacon.

All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them, but the main difference between animate and inanimate are, that the spirits of things animate are all contained within themselves, and branched in veins as blood is; and the spirits have also certain seats where the principal do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort: but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in and cut off by the tangible parts, as air in snow. Bacon.

The balmy spirit of the western breeze. Anon.

2. [esprit, Fr.] An immaterial substance; an intellectual being.

Spirits a substance wherein thinking, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving, do subsist. Locke.

She is a spirit; yet not like air or wind,
Nor like the spirits about the heart or brain;
Nor like those spirits which alchymists do find,
When they in ev'ry thing seek gold in vain:
For she all natures under heav'n doth pass,
Being like those spirits which God's bright face do see;
Or like himself, whose image once she was,
Though now, alas! she scarce his shadow be:
For of all forms she holds the first degree,
That are to gross material bodies knit,
Yet she herself is bodyless and free,
And though confin'd is almost infinite. Daniel.

I shall depend upon your constant friendship like the trust we have in benevolent spirits, who, though we never see or hear them, we think are constantly praying for us. Pope.

If we exclude space, there will remain in the world but matter and mind; or body and spirit. Watts.

You are all of you pure spirits. I don't mean that you have not bodies that want meat and drink, and sleep and cloathing; but that all that deserves to be called you, is nothing else but spirit. Law.

3. The soul of man.

The spirit shall return unto God that gave it. Bible.

Look, who comes here? a grave unto a soul,
Holding th' eternal spirit 'gainst her will
In the vile prison of afflicted breath. Shakspeare.

Every thing that you call yours, belongs this spirit, is but like your cloathing: sometimes that is only to be used for a while, and then to end, and die, and wear away. Law.

4. An apparition.

They were terrified, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. Luke.

Perhaps you might see the image, and not the glass; the former appearing like a spirit in the air. Bacon.

Whilst young, preserve his tender mind from all impressions of spirits and goblins in the dark. Locke.

5. Temper; habitual disposition of mind.

He sits
Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raise
Quite out their native language. Milton.

That peculiar law of christianity, which forbids revenge, no man can think it grievous, who considers the restless torment of a malicious and revengeful spirit. Tillotson.

Nor once disturb their heav'nly spirits
With Seaphi's cheats, or Cæsar's merits. Pope.

Let them consider how far they are from the spirit which prays for its most unjust enemies, if they have not kindness enough to pray for them by whose labours and service they live, or even themselves. Law.

He is the devout man, who lives no longer to his own will, or the way and spirit of the world, but to the sole will of God. Law.

6. Ardour; courage; elevation; vehemence of mind.

'Tis well blown, lads,
This morning, like the spirit of a youth
That means to be of note, begins betimes. Shakspeare.

Farewel the big war,
The spirit-stirring drum, th' ear-piercing fife. Shakspeare.

The king's party, called the cavaliers, began to recover their spirits. Swift.

7. Genius; vigour of mind.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont
Here needs me, whiles the famous ancients
Of my most dreaded sovereign I recount,
By which all earthly princes the doth far surmount. Spenser.

To a mighty work thou goest, O Lord,
That equal spirits and equal pow'rs will need. Denham.

A wild Tartar, when he spies
A man that's handsome, valiant, wise,
If he can kill him, thinks t'inherit
His wit, his beauty, and his spirit. Butler.

The noblest spirit or genius cannot accomplish enough of mankind, to pretend to the effects of heroick virtue. Temple.

8. Turn of mind; power of mind, moral or intellectual.

You were as'd
So fay extremity was the trier of ſpirits,
That common chances common men could bear.
Shakſpeare.

Aſk but half thy mighty ſpirit for me. Cowley.
A perfect judge will read each work of wit
With the ſame ſpirit that its author writ:
Survey the whole, nor ſeek ſlight fault to find,
Where nature moves, and rapture warms, the mind.
Pope.

Intellectual powers diſtinct from the body.

Theſe diſcourſes made ſo deep impreſſion upon the mind and ſpirit of the prince, whoſe nature was inclined to adventures, that he was tranſported with the thought of it. Clarendon.

Before it perhaps he alſo ſaw
Rich Mexico, the ſeat of Montezume. Milton.

2. Sentiment; perception.

You are too great to be by me gainſaid:
Your ſpirit is too true, your fears too certain. Shakſ.

3. Eagerneſs; deſire.

God has changed men's tempers with the times, and made a ſpirit of building ſucceed a ſpirit of pulling down. South.

4. Man of activity; man of life, fire, and enterpriſe.

The watry kingdom is no bar
To ſtop the foreign ſpirits, but they come. Shakſp.

5. Perſons diſtinguiſhed by qualities of the mind. A French word, happily growing obſolete.

Romiſh adventurers, from the riſing up of ſome ſchiſmatical ſpirits amongſt us, conclude that the whole body of our church is ſchiſmatical, becauſe ſome branches or members thereof were ſuch.
White.

Out pitying God did well form'd ſpirits raiſe,
Not for the toilſome buſineſs of their days,
To free the groaning nation, and to give
Their hurt, and then the rules in peace to live.
Cowley.

Such ſpirits as he deſired to pleaſe, ſuch would I chuſe for my judges. Dryden.

6. That which gives vigour or cheerfulneſs to the mind; the pureſt part of the body, bordering, ſays Sydenham, on immateriality. In this meaning it is commonly written with the plural termination.

Though thou didſt but jeſt,
With my vex'd ſpirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake. Shakſpeare.

When I ſit and tell
The warlike feats I've done, his ſpirits fly out
Into my ſtory. Shakſpeare.

Alas! when all our lamps are burn'd,
Our bodies waſted, and our ſpirits ſpent,
When we have all the learned volumes turn'd,
Which vaild men's wits both help and ornament,
What can we know, or what can we diſcern?
Davies.

It was the time when gentle ſleep began
To drench with deep the buſy ſpirits of man.
Couſin.

To ſing thy praiſe, would heav'n my breath prolong,
Infuſe into my verſe ſo worthy ſuch a ſong,
As Thracian Orpheus ſhould tranſcend my lays.
Dryden.

All men by experience find the neceſſity and aid of ſpirits in the buſineſs of concoction. Blackm.

By means of the curious modification of the watery nerves, the orgaſms of the ſpirits ſhould be elaſed. Derham.

Into our body thus the ferret ſoul
Of ſpirits creeds, with vigour fills, the whole;
Each motion guides, and every nerve ſuſtains,
Itſelf unſeen, but in th' effects remains. Pope.

He is always forced to drink a hearty glaſs, to ſet the thoughts of buſineſs out of his head, and make his ſpirits drowſy enough for ſleep. Law.

Than ſpouſal rites prejudice the marriage bed. Crashaw.

This other, in her prime of love,
Spouſal embraces vitiated with gold. Milton.

Sleep'ſt thou, careleſs of the nuptial day?
Thy ſpouſal ornament neglected lies;
Ariſe, prepare the bridal train, ariſe. Pope.

SPOU'SAL. n. ſ. [eſpouſailles, Fr. ſponſalia Lat.] Marriage; nuptials.

As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms ſuch a ſpouſal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealouſy,
Thruſt in between the paction of theſe kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporate league. Shakſpeare.

The amorous bird of night
Sung ſpouſal, and bid haſte the ev'ning ſtar,
On his hill top to light the bridal lamp. Milton.

The ſpouſals of Hippolita the queen,
What tilts and tourneys at the feaſt were ſeen! Dryden.

Ætherial muſick did her death prepare,
Like joyful ſounds of ſpouſals in the air:
A radiant light did her crown'd temples gild. Dryden.

SPOUSE. n. f. [ſponſa, ſponſus, Latin; eſpouſe, French.] One joined in marriage; a husband or wife.

The ſubſtance is true ivy; after it is taken down, the friends of the family are deſirous to have ſome ſprig to keep. Bacon.

Our chilling climate hardly bears
A ſprig of bays in fifty years;
While ev'ry fool his claim alleges,
As if it grew in common hedges. Swift.

SPRIG Chryſtal. n. f.

In perpendicular fiſſures, chryſtal is found in form of an hexangular column, adhering at one end to the ſtone, and near the other leſſening gradually, till it terminates in a point: this is called by lapidaries ſprig or rock chryſtal. Woodward.

SPRFOOT. adj. [from sprig.] Full of small branches.

SPRIGHT. n. ſ. [contraction of ſpirit; ſpiritus, Latin. It was anciently written ſprete or ſpryte; and ſpirit, as now written, was long conſidered in verſe as a monoſyllable: this word ſhould therefore be ſpelled ſprite, and its derivatives ſpritely, ſpriteful; but cuſtom has determined otherwiſe.]

1. Spirit; ſhade; ſoul; incorporeal agent.
   She doth diſplay
   The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
   Through which her words ſo wiſe do make their way,
   To bear the meſſage of her ſprights. Spenſer.
   Earth he called out of deep darkneſs dread
   Legions of ſprights, the which, like little flies
   Flutt'ring about his ever damned head,
   Await whereto their ſervice he applies. F. Queen.
   While with heav'nly charity ſhe ſpoke,
   A ſtreaming blaze the ſilent ſhadows broke;
   The birds obſcene to foreſts wing'd their flight,
   And gaping graves receiv'd the guilty ſpright.
   Dryden.

2. Walking ſpirit; apparition.
   The ideas of goblins and ſprights have no more to do with darkneſs than light; yet let but a fooliſh maid inculcate theſe often on the mind of a child, poſſibly he ſhall never be able to ſeparate them again. Locke.

3. Power which gives cheerfulneſs or courage.
   O chaſtity! the chief of heav'nly lights,
   Which mak'ſt us moſt immortal ſhape to wear,
   Hold thou my heart, eſtabliſh thou my ſprights;
   To only thee my conſtant courſe I bear,
   Till ſpotleſs ſoul unto thy boſom fly;
   Such life to lead, ſuch death I vow to die. Sidney.

4. An arrow. Not in uſe.
   We had in uſe for ſea fight ſhort arrows called ſprights, without any other heads ſave wood ſharpened; which were diſcharged out of muſkets, and would pierce through the ſides of ſhips where a bullet would not. Bacon.

To SPRIGHT. v. a. To haunt as a ſpright. A ludicrous uſe.
   I am ſprighted with a fool. Shakſpeare.

SPRI'GHTFUL. adj. [ſpright and full.] Lively; briſk; gay; vigorous.

   Had giv'n the ſignal of approaching war. Dryden.
   Each morn they wak'd me with a ſprightly lay:
   Of opening heav'n they ſung, and gladſome day.
   Prior.
   The ſprightly Sylvia trips along the green;
   She runs, but hopes ſhe does not run unſeen. Pope.

To SPRING. v. n. pret. ſprung or ſprang, anciently ſprong; part. ſprung. [ſpringan, Saxon; ſpringen, Dutch.]

1. To ariſe out of the ground, and grow, by vegetative power.
   All b'eſt ſecrets,
   All you unpubliſh'd virtues of the earth,
   Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate
   In the good man's diſtreſs. Shakſpeare.
   To his muſick plants and flowers
   Ever ſprung, as ſun and ſhowers
   There had made a laſting ſpring. Shakſpeare.
   To ſatisfy the deſolate ground, and cauſe the bud of the tender herb to ſpring forth. Job.
   Other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that ſprang up and increaſed. Mark.
   Tell me, in what happy fields
   The thiſtle ſprings, to which the lily yields? Pope.

2. To begin to grow.
   That the nipples ſhould be made with ſuch perforations as to admit paſſage to the milk when drawn, otherwiſe to retain it; and the teeth of the young not ſpring, are effects of providence. Ray.

3. To proceed as from ſeed.
   Ye ſhall eat this year ſuch things as grow of themſelves; and in the ſecond year that which ſpringeth of the ſame. 2 Kings.
   Much more good of ſin ſhall ſpring. Milton.

4. To come into exiſtence; to iſſue forth.
   Had'ſt thou ſway'd as kings ſhould do,
   Giving no ground unto the houſe of York,
   They never then had ſprung like ſummer flies.
   Shakſpeare.
   Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it part,
   And each warm wiſh ſprings mutual from the heart.
   Pope.

5. To ariſe; to appear; to begin to appear or to exiſt.
   When the day began to ſpring, they let her go.
   Judges.
   To them which ſat in the region and ſhadow of death, light is ſprung up. Matthew.
   Fly, fly, profane fogs! far hence fly away,
   Taint not the pure ſtreams of the ſpringing day
   With your dull influence: it is for you
   To ſit and ſcowl upon night's heavy brow. Craſh.
   Do not blaſt my ſpringing hopes,
   Which thy kind hand has planted in my ſoul.
   Rowe.

6. To iſſue with effect or force.
   Swift fly the years, and riſe th' expected morn!
   O ſpring to light, auſpicious babe, be born! Pope.

7. To proceed as from anceſtors, or a country.
   How youngly he began to ſerve his country,
   How long continued; and what ſtock he ſprings of;
   The noble houſe of Marcius. Shakſpeare.
   Our Lord ſprung out of Judea. Hebrews.
   All theſe
   Shall, like the brethren ſprung of dragon's teeth,
   Ruin each other, and be fall amongſt 'em. Samſon.
   Heroes of old, by rapine and by ſpoil,
   In ſearch of fame did all the world embroil;
   Thus to their gods each then alied his name,
   This ſprang from Jove, and that from Titan came.
   Granville.

8. To proceed as from a ground, cauſe, or reaſon.
   They found new hope to ſpring
   Out of deſpair. Milton.
   Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, ſprang from the ſame original, and deſcend by the ſame rules. Locke.

9. To grow; to thrive.
   What makes all this but Jupiter the king,
   At whoſe command we periſh and we ſpring?
   Then 'tis our beſt, ſince thus ordain'd to die,
   To make a virtue of neceſſity. Dryden.

10. To bound; to leap; to jump; to ruſh haſtily; to appear ſuddenly.
    Some ſtrange commotion
    Is in his brain; he bites his lip, and ſtarts;
    Stops on a ſudden, looks upon the ground,
    Then lays his finger on his temple; ſtraight
    Springs out into faſt gait, then ſtops again. Shakſp.
    I ſprang not more in joy at firſt hearing he was a man child, than now in firſt ſeeing he had proved himſelf a man. Shakſpeare.
    He called for a light, and ſprang in, and fell before Paul. Acts.
    When hear'n was nam'd, they look'd their laſt again;
    Then ſprung the forth, they follow'd her amain.
    Dryden.
    Afraid to ſleep,
    Her blood all-fever'd, with a furious leap
    She ſprung from bed. Dryden.
    Nor lies the long; but, as her fates ordain,
    Springs up to life; and, freſh to ſecond pain,
    Is lay'd to-day, to-morrow to be ſlain. Dryden.
    See, aw'd by heav'n, the blooming Hebrew flies
    Her artful tongue, and more perſuaſive eyes;
    And, ſpringing from her diſappointed arms,
    Prefers a dungeon to forbidden charms. Blackmore.
    The mountain ſtag that ſprings
    From height to height, and bounds along the plains,
    Nor has a maſter to reſtrain his courſe,
    That mountain ſtag would Vanoo rather be
    Than be a ſlave. Philips.

11. To fly with elaſtick power; to ſtart.
    A link of horſehair, that will eaſily ſlip, fatten to the end of the ſtick that ſprings. Mortimer.

12. To riſe from a covert.
    My doors are hateful to my eyes,
    Fill'd and damn'd up with gaping creditors,
    Watchful as fowlers when their game will ſpring.
    Otway.
    A covey of partridges ſpringing in our front, put our infantry in diſorder. Addiſon.

13. To iſſue from a fountain.
    Iſrael's ſervants digged in the valley, and found a well of ſpringing water. Genеſis.
    Let the wide world his praiſes ſing,
    Where Tagus and Euphrates ſpring;
    And from the Danube's frothy banks to thoſe
    Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows.
    Roſcommon.

14. To proceed as from a ſource.
    'Tis true from force the nobleſt title ſprings,
    I therefore hold from that which firſt made kings.
    Dryden.

15. To ſhoot; to iſſue with ſpeed and violence.
    Then ſhook the ſacred fane, and ſudden light
    Sprung thro' the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright:
    The pow'r, behold! the pow'r in glory ſhone,
    By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryd.
    The friendly gods a ſpringing gale ordain'd;
    The fleet ſwift tilting o'er the ſurges flew,
    Till Grecian clifts appear'd. Pope.

To SPRING. v. a.

1. To ſtart; to ruſe game.
   Thus I reclaim'd my buzzard love to fly
   At what, and when, and how, and where I choſe;
   Now negligent of ſport I lie;
   And now, as other hawkners uſe,
   I ſpring a miſtreſs, ſwear, write, ſigh, and die;
   And the game kill'd, or loſt, go talk of me. Donne.
   That ſprung the game you were to let,
   Before you'd time to draw the net. Hudibras.
   A large cock pheaſant he ſprung in one of the neighbouring woods. Spectator.
   Here I uſe a great deal of diligence before I can ſpring any thing; whereas in town, whilſt I am following one character, I am croſſed by another, that they puzzle the chaſe. Addiſon.
   See how the well-taught pointer leads the way!
   The ſcent grows warm, he ſtops, he ſprings the prey. Gay.

2. To produce quickly or unexpectedly.
   The nurſe, ſurpris'd with fright,
   Starts up and leaves her bed, and ſprings a light.
   Dryden.
   Thus man by his own ſtrength to heav'n would ſoar,
   And would not be oblig'd to God for more:
   Vain, wretched creature, how art thou miſled,
   To think thy wit theſe godlike notions bred!
   Theſe truths are not the product of thy mind,
   But dropt from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:
   Reveal'd religion firſt inform'd thy ſight,
   And reaſon ſaw not, till faith ſprung the light.
   Dryden.

He that has such burning zeal, and springs such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot. Collier.

3. To make by starting: applied to a ship.

People discharge themselves of burdensome reflections, as of the cargo of a ship that has sprung a leak. L'Estrange.

No more accuse thy pen; but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time:
Beware the publick laughter of the town,
Thou spring'st a leak already in thy crown. Dryd.

Whether the sprung a leak, I cannot find,
Or whether she was overset with wind,
But down at once with all her crew she went.
Dryden.

4. To discharge: applied to a mine.

Our miners discovered several of the enemies mines, who have sprung divers others which did little execution. Tatler.

I spring a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown Addison.

5. To contrive on a sudden; to produce hastily; to offer unexpectedly.

The friends to the cause sprung a new project, and it was advertised that the crisis could not appear, till the ladies had shewn their zeal against the Pretender. Swift.

6. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use.

Unbecoming skill
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed.
Thomson.

7. Of the verb spring the primary sense is to grow out of the ground: so plants spring, thence spring the season; so water springs, thence spring a fountain. Plants rise unexpectedly, and waters break out violently; thence any thing done suddenly, or coming hastily, is said to spring; thence spring means an elastick body. Thus the active significations all import suddenness or force.

SPRING. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The season in which plants rise and vegetate; the vernal season.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his musick plants and flowers
Ever sprung, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring. Shakspeare.

The spring visiteth not these quarters so timely as the eastern parts. Carew.

Come, gentle spring, ethereal mildness come,
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud
Upon our plains descend. Thomson.

2. An elastick body; a body which, when distorted, has the power of restoring itself to its former state

This may be performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches: the spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wings. Wilkins.

The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered, and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the sudderer throws the chape of the vice open. Moxon.

He that was sharp-sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastick motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. Locke.

3. Elastick force.

Heav'ns, what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow!
Dryden.

Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another impenetrability makes them only stop. If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuo, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest; unless they be elastick, and receive new motion from their spring. Newton.

The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring, which is weakened when she operates more in concert with the body. Addison.

In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring. Arbuthnot

4. Any active power; any cause by which motion or action is produced or propagated.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life;
So much the name of father awes me still. Dryden.

Nature is the same, and man is the same, has the same affections and passions, and the same springs that give them motion. Rymer.

Our author flums by vulgar springs to move Pope.

5. A leap; a bound; a jump; a violent effort; a sudden struggle.

The prisoner with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight.
Dryden.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground!
Addison.

6. A leak; a start of plank.

Each petty hand
Can steer a ship because it will;
Govern, and carry her to her ends, must know
His tides, his currents, how to shift his sails;
Where her springs are, her leaks, and how to stop 'em. Ben Jonson.

7. A fountain; an issue of water from the earth.

Now stop thy springs; my sea shall suck them dry,
And swell so much the higher by their ebb. Shakesp.

Springs on the tops of hills pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters. Bacon.

When in th' effects she doth the causes know,
And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring doth rise;
And seeing the branch, conceives the root below;
These things the views without the body's eyes.
Davies.

He adds the running springs and standing lakes,
And bounding banks for winding rivers makes.
Dryden.

Nile hears him knocking at his seven-fold gates,
And locks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates. Dryden.

He bathed himself in cold spring water in the midst of winter. Locke.

The water that falls down from the clouds, sinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in springs, commonly at the bottom of hilly ground. Locke.

8. A source; that by which any thing is supplied.

To that great spring which doth great kingdoms move,
The sacred spring whence right and honour streams,
Distilling virtue, shedding peace and love
In every place, as Cynthia sheds her beams. Davies.

I move, I see, I speak, discourse, and know;
Though now I am, I was not always so
Then that from which I was must be before,
Whom, as my spring of being, I adore. Dryden.

Rolling down through so many barbarous ages, from the spring of Virgil, it bears along with it the filth of the Goths and Vandals. Dryden.

He has a secret spring of spiritual joy, and the continual feast of a good conscience within, that forbids him to be miserable. Bentley.

9. Rise; beginning.

About the spring of the day, Samuel called Saul to the top of the house. 1 Samuel

10. Cause; original.

The season of the quicker or slower termination of this distemper, arises from these three springs. Blackmore

The first springs of great events, like those of great rivers, are often mean and little. Swift

SPRING. } n. s. A youth. Obsolete.
SPRINGAL. }

Before the bull she pastur'd winged love,
With his young brother sport, light fluttering
Upon the waves, as each had been a dove;
The one his bow and shafts, the other spring.
A burning torch about his head did move
As in their sire's new love both triumphing. Spenser.

SPRINGE. n. s. [from spring.] A gin; a noose which, fastened to any elastick body, catches by a spring or jerk.

As a woodcock to my own springe, Ofrick,
I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery. Shakesp.

Let goats for food their loaded udders lend,
But neither springes, nets, nor snares employ. Dryd.

With hasty springes we the birds betray,
Slight lines of hair surprise the finny prey. Pope.

SPRI'NGER. n. s. [from spring.] One who rouses game.

SPRI'NGHALT. n. s. [spring and halt.] A lameness by which the horse twitches up his legs.

They've all new legs, and lame ones: one would take it,
That never saw them pace before, the spavin
And springhalt reign'd among them. Shakspeare.

SPRI'NGINESS. n. s. [from springy.] Elasticity; power of restoring itself.

Where there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow; since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the steel were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness. Boyle.

The air is a thin fluid body, endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction. Bentley.

SPRI'NGLE. n. s. [from spring.] A springe; an elastick noose.

Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every plash shoots reveth for springles to take them. Carew.

To SPRI'NGLE. v. a. Misprinted, I suppose, for sprinkle.

This is Timon's last,
Who, stuck and spangled with your flatteries,
Washes it off, and springles in your faces
Your reeking villany. Shakspeare.

SPRI'NGTIDE. n. s. [spring and tide.] Tide at the new and full moon; high tide.

Love, like springtides, full and high,
Swells in every youthful vein;
But each tide does less supply,
Till they quite shrink in again
If a flow in age appear,
'Tis but rain, and runs not clear. Dryden.

Most people die when the moon chiefly reigns, that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide. Grew.

SPRI'NGY. adj. [from spring.]

1. Elastick; having the power of restoring itself.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
Such as it is, to fan the vital flame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in th' arterial road;
While the tir'd heart had throve, with fruitless pain,
To push the lazy tide along the vein. Blackmore.

Thus salt contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by reducing the particles of air to be springy and ramous, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power. Newton.

Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy Arbuthnot.

If our air had not been a springy body, no animal could have exercised the very function of respiration; and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springiness, but by some other unknown quality. Bentley.

2. [from spring.] Full of springs or fountains. Not used.

Where the sandy or gravelly lands are springy or wet, rather marl them for grass than corn. Mortimer.

To SPRI'NKLE. v. a. [sprinkelen, Dutch.]

1. To scatter; to disperse in small masses.

Shakes the high thicket, haſte I all about,
Number my ranks, and viſit every ſprout. Milton.

To this kid, taken out of the womb, were brought in the tender ſprouts of ſhrubs; and, after it had taſted, it began to eat of ſuch as are the uſual food of goats. Ray.

SPROUTS. n. ſ. pl. [from ſprout.] Young coleworts.

SPRUCE. adj. [Skinner derives this word from preux, French; but he propoſes it with heſitation: Junius thinks it comes from ſprout: Caſaubon trifles yet more contemptibly. I know not whence to deduce it, except from pruce. In ancient books we find furniture of pruce a thing coſtly and elegant, and thence probably came ſpruce.] Nice; trim; neat without elegance. It was anciently uſed of things with a ſerious meaning; it is now uſed only of perſons, and with levity.

The tree
That wraps that chryſtal in a wooden tomb,
Shall be took up ſpruce, fill'd with diamond. Donne.

Thou wilt not leave me in the middle ſtreet,
Tho' ſome more ſpruce companion thou doſt meet. Donne.

Along the criſped ſhades and bow'rs
Revels the ſpruce and jocund ſpring;
The graces, and the roſy-boſom'd hours,
Thither all their bounties bring. Milton.

I muſt not ſlip into too ſpruce a ſtyle for ſerious matters; and yet I approve not that dull inſipid way of writing practiſed by many chymiſts. Boyle.

He put his hand and beard in order,
The *ſpruce*r to accoſt and board her. Hudibras.

He is ſo ſpruce, that he can never be genteel. Tatler.

Whether the body politick be
A horſe whereon the governor doth ride,
Who, newly in the ſeat, that it may know
He can command it, lets it ſtraight feel the ſpur. Shakſpeare.

He preſently ſet ſpurs to his horſe, and departed with the reſt of the company. Knolles.

Was I for this nitiled Sir,
A girt with ruſty ſword and ſpur,
To tame and honour to wage battle? Hudibras.

Incitement; inſtigation. It is uſed with to before the effect. Dryden has uſed it with of; but, if he ſpeaks properly, he means to make the following word perſonal.

Seeing then that nothing can move, unleſs there be ſome end, the deſire whereof provoketh unto action, how ſhould that divine power of the ſoul, that ſpirit of our mind, ever ſtir itſelf into action, unleſs it have alſo the like ſpur? Hooker.

What need we any ſpur, but our own cauſe,
To prick us to redreſs? Shakſpeare.

His laws are deep, and not vulgar; not made upon the ſpur of a particular occaſion, but out of providence of the future, to make his people more and more happy. Bacon.

Reward is the ſpur of virtue in all good arts, all laudable attempts, and emulation, which is the other ſpur, will never be wanting, when particular rewards are propoſed. Dryden.

The chief, if not only, ſpur to human induſtry and action, is uneaſineſs. Locke.

SPY. n. s. [yspio, Welsh; espion, French; spie, Dutch; speculator, Latin. It is observed by a German, that spy has been in all ages a word by which the eye, or office of the eye, has been expressed: thus the Arimaspians of old, fabled to have but one eye, were so called from ari, which among the nations of Caucasus still signifies one, and spi, which has been received from the old Asiatick languages for an eye, sight, or one that sees.] One sent to watch the conduct or motions of others; one sent to gain intelligence in an enemy's camp or country.

We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
And take upon 's the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies. Shakspeare.

Spies of the Volscians
Held me in chace, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about. Shakspeare.

Every corner was possessed by diligent spies upon their master and mistress. Clarendon.

I come no spy,
With purpose to explore, or to disturb,
The secrets of your realm. Milton.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issued forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work. Milton.

Nothing lies hid from radiant eyes;
All they subdue become their spies:
Secrets, as chosen jewels, are Presented to oblige the fair. Waller.

Over my men I'll set my careful spies,
To watch rebellion in their very eyes. Dryden.

These wretched spies of wit must then confess,
They take more pains to please themselves the less. Dryden.

Those who attend on their state, are so many spies placed upon them by the publick to observe them nearly. Atterbury.

To SPY. v. a. [See SPY.]

1. To discover by the eye at a distance, or in a state of concealment; to espy.

Light hath no tongue, but is all eye;

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd,
Such strength and such stability impart,
That storms above, and earthquakes under ground,
Break not the poles. Blackmore.

[illegible]

2. Fixedness; not fluidity.

Since fluidness and stability are contrary qualities, we may conceive that the firmness or stability of a body consists in this, that the particles which compose it do so stick or are so entangled, that there is among them a mutual cohesion. Boyle.

3. Firmness of resolution.

STA'BLE. adj. [stable, Fr. stabilis, Lat.]

1. Fixed; able to stand.

2. Steady; constant; fixed in resolution or conduct.

Have follow'd with delight the powerful ſound. Roſcommon.

They ſtarting up beheld the heavy fight. Dryden.

The mind often works in ſearch of ſome hidden ideas, though ſometimes they ſtart up in our minds of their own accord. Locke.

Might Dryden bleſs once more our eyes,
New Blackmores and new Milbourns muſt ariſe;
Nay, ſhould great Homer lift his awful head,
Zoilus again would ſtart up from the dead. Pope.

3. To move with ſudden quickneſs.

The flowers, call'd out of their beds,
Start, and raiſe up their drowſy heads. Cleaveland.

A ſpirit fit to ſtart into an empire,
And look the world to law. Dryden.

She at the ſummons roll'd her eyes around,
And match'd the ſtarting ſerpents from the ground. Pope.

4. To ſhrink; to winch.

What trick, what ſtarting hole, canſt thou find out, to hide thee from this open ſhame? Shakſp.

With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaſte, the flame will back deſcend,
And turn him to no pain; but, if he ſtart,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shakſpeare.

5. To deviate.

The lords and gentlemen take all the meaneſt ſort upon themſelves; for they are beſt able to bring them in, whenſoever any of them ſtarteth out. Spenſer.

Th' old drudging ſun from his long-beaten way
Shall at thy voice ſtart and miſguide the day;
The jocund orbs ſhall break their meaſur'd pace,
And ſtubborn poles change their allotted place. Cowley.

I rank him with the prodigies of fame,
With things which ſtart from nature's common rules,
With bearded infants, and with teeming mules. Creech.

Keep your ſoul to the work when ready to ſtart aſide, unleſs you will be a ſlave to every wild imagination. Watts.

6. To ſet out from the barrier at a race.

It ſeems to be rather a terminus a quo than a true principle, as the ſtarting poſt is none of the horſe's legs. Boyle.

Should ſome god tell me, that I ſhould be born
And try again, his offer I ſhould ſcorn;
Aſham'd, when I have ended well my race,
To be led back to my firſt ſtarting place. Denham.

When'er on the goal they ſtart,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Ruſh to the race. Dryden.

The clangor of the trumpet gives the ſign,
At once the v ſtart, advancing in a line. Dryden.

7. To ſet out on any purſuit.

The vapour of charcoal hath killed many; and it is the more dangerous, becauſe it cometh without any ill ſmell, and ſtealeth on by little and little. Bacon.

A ſoft and ſolemn breathing ſound
Roſe like a ſteam of rich diſtill'd perfumes,
And ſtole upon the air, that even ſilence
Was took ere ſhe was ware. Milton.

As wiſe artiſts mix their colours ſo,
That by degrees they from each other go;
Black ſteals unheeded from the neighb'ring white,
So on us ſtole our bleſſed change. Dryden.

At a time when he had no ſteward, he ſtole away. Swift.

Now his fierce eyes with ſparkling fury glow;
Now ſighs ſteal out, and tears begin to flow. Pope.

2. To practiſe theft; to play the thief; to take any thing theviſhly; to have the habit of thieving.

Stealing is the taking from another what is his, without his knowledge or allowance. Locke.

The good humour is to ſteal at a minute's reſt.

3. Secret act; clandeſtine practice. By ſtealth, means ſecretly; clandeſtinely: with deſire of concealment: but, like ſteal, is often uſed in a good ſenſe.

The wiſdom of the ſame ſpirit borrowed from melody that pleaſure, which, mingled with heavenly myſteries, cauſeth the ſmoothneſs and ſoftneſs of that, which toucheth the ear, to convey, as it were by ſtealth, the treaſure of good things into man's mind. Hooker.

I feel this youth's perfections,
With an inviſible and ſubtile ſtealth,
To creep in at mine eyes. Shakſpeare.

The monarch, blinded with deſire of wealth,
With ſteel invades his brother's life by ſtealth
Before the ſacred altar. Dryden.

Let humble Allen, with an awkward ſhame,
Do good by ſtealth, and blush to find it fame.
Pope.

STEA'LTHY. adj. [from ſtealth.] Done clandeſtinely; performed by ſtealth.

Now wither'd murder, with his ſtealthy pace,
Moves like a ghoſt. Shakſpeare.

STEAM. n. ſ. [ꝑteme, Saxon.] The ſmoke or vapour of any thing moiſt and hot.

Sweet odours are, in ſuch a company as there is ſteam and heat, things of great refreſhment. Bacon.

His odorous ſacrifice and propitious fire from heaven
Conſum'd, with nimble glance and grateful ſteam.
Milton.

While the temple ſmoak'd with hallow'd ſteam,
They waſh the virgin. Dryden.

Such the figure of a feaſt,
Which, were it not for plenty and for ſteam,
Might be reſembled to a ſick man's dream. King.

And him the grilly ghoſt that ſpurr'd the infernal ſteed. Dryden.

Who like our native African inſtructs
The fiery ſteed, and trains him to his hand? Addiſ.

See the bold youth ſtrain up the threat'ning reins,
Hang o'er their courſers heads with eager ſpeed,
And earth rolls back beneath the flying ſteed. Pope.

Some nymphs affect a more heroic breed,
And vault from hunters to the manag'd ſteed.
Young.

STEEL. n. ſ. [ꝑtel, Sax. ſtael, Dutch.]

1. A kind of iron, refined and purified by the fire with other ingredients, which renders it white, and its grain cloſer and finer than common iron. Steel, of all other metals, is that ſuſceptible of the greateſt degree of hardneſs, when well tempered; whence its great uſe in the making of tools and inſtruments of all kinds. Chambers.

Steel is made from the pureſt and fitteſt iron, by keeping it red hot, ſtratified with coal-duſt and wood-aſhes, or other ſubſtances that abound in the phlogiſton, for ſeveral hours in a cloſe furnace. Hill.

At her back a bow and quiver gay,
Stuff'd with ſteel-headed darts, wherewith ſhe quell'd
The ſavage beaſts in her victorious play. Spenſer.

With mighty bars of long-enduring braſs
The ſteel-bound doors and iron gates ſhe tries.
Fairfax.

They are not charm'd againſt your points of ſteel
nor iron frain'd. Chapman.

A looking-glaſs, with the ſteel behind, looketh whiter than glaſs ſimple. Bacon.

Diamonds, though hard bodies, will not readily ſtrike fire with ſteel, much leſs with one another; nor a flint eaſily with a ſteel, if they both be wet, the ſparks being then quenched in their moiſture. Boyle.

Both were of ſhining ſteel, and wrought to proof
As might the ſtrokes of two ſuch arms endure
Dryden.

2. It is often uſed metonymically for weapons or armour.

Brave Macbeth with his brandiſh'd ſteel,
Which ſmok'd with bloody execution,
Carv'd out his paſſage till he had fac'd the ſlave.
Shakſpeare.

Poliſh'd ſteel from far ſeverely ſhines. Dryden.

He, ſudden as the word,
In proud Plexippus' boſom plung'd the ſword;
Toxeus amaz'd, and with amazement flow,
Stood doubting; and, while doubting thus he ſtood,
Receiv'd the ſteel bath'd in his brother's blood.
Dryden.

3. Chalybeate medicines.

After relaxing, ſteel ſtrengthens the ſolid, it likewiſe an antacid. Arbuth.

Shakſpeare.

2. To make hard or firm. It is uſed to be applied to the mind, very often in a bad ſenſe.

Lies well ſteel'd with weighty arguments.
Shakſpeare.

So ſervice ſhall with ſteeled fingers toil,
And labour ſhall refreſh itſelf with hope.
Shakſpeare.

From his metal was his party ſteel'd;
Which, once in him rebated, all the reſt
Turn'd on themſelves, like dull and heavy iron.
Shakſpeare.

O God of battles! ſteel my ſoldiers hearts
Poſſeſs them not with fear. Shakſpeare.

Why will you fight againſt ſo ſweet a paſſion
And ſteel your heart to ſuch a world of chaos?
Addiſon.

Man, fooliſh man!
Scarce know'ſt thou how thyſelf began,
Yet, ſteel'd with ſtudied boldneſs, thou dar'ſt try
To ſend thy doubted reaſon's dazzled eye
Through the myſterious gulf of vaſt immenſity.
Prior.

Let the ſteel'd Turk be deaf to ruthleſs cries
See virgins raviſh'd with relentleſs eyes. Tickell.

So periſh all whoſe breaſts the furies ſteel
And curs'd with hearts unknowing how to yield.
Pope.

STE'ELY. adj. [from ſteel.]

1. Made of ſteel.

Thy brother's blood the thirſty earth hath drunk
Broach'd with the ſteely point of Clifford's lance.
Shakſpeare.

Here ſmokes his forge, he bares his ſinewy arm
And early ſtrokes the ſounding anvil warm,
Around his ſhop the ſteely ſparkles flew,
As for the ſteed he ſhap'd the bending ſhoe.
Gay.

2. Hard; firm.

That ſhe would unarm her noble heart of ſteely reſiſtance againſt the ſweet blows of love.
Sidney.

STEEP. n. f. Precipice; afcent or defcent approaching to perpendicularity.

As that Thebean monfter that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who folv'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out and folv'd, for grief and fpight
Caft herfelf headlong from th' Ifmenian fteep. Milton.

As high turrets for their airy fteep
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards fhoot
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her fecure foundation lie,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

Inftructs the beaft to know his native force,
To take the bit between his teeth, and fly
To the next headlong fteep of anarchy. Dryden.

4. A ſmall length; a ſmall ſpace.

There is but a ſtep between me and death. 1 Samuel

5. [In the plural.] Walk; paſſage.

O may thy pow'r, propitious ſtill to me,
Conduct my ſteps to find the fatal tree
In this deep foreſt. Dryden.

6. Gradation; degree.

The ſame ſin for ſubſtance hath ſundry ſteps and degrees, in reſpect whereof one man becometh a more heinous offender than another. Perkins.

7. Progreſſion; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phænomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from thoſe manifeſt principles, would be a very great ſtep in philoſophy, though the cauſes of thoſe principles were not yet diſcovered. Newton.

One injury is beſt defended by a ſecond, and this by a third: by theſe ſteps the old maſters of the palace in France became maſters of the kingdom; and by theſe ſteps a general during pleaſure might have grown into a general for life, and a general for life into a king. Swift.

The queriſt muſt not proceed too ſwiftly towards the determination of his point, that he may with more eaſe draw the learner to thoſe principles ſtep by ſtep, from whence the final concluſion will ariſe. Watts.

8. Footſtep; print of the foot.

From hence Aſtrea took her flight, and here
The prints of her departing ſteps appear. Dryden.

9. Gait; manner of walking.

Sudden from the golden throne
With a ſubmiſſive ſtep I haſted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

10. Action; inſtance of conduct.

The reputation of a man depends upon the firſt ſteps he makes in the world. Pope.

STEP, in compoſition, ſignifies one who is related only by marriage. [ſteop, Sax. from ſtæpan, to deprive, or make an orphan: for the Saxons not only ſaid a ſtep-mother, but a ſtep-daughter, or ſtep-ſon; to which it indeed, according to this etymology, more properly belongs: but as it is now ſeldom applied but to the mother, it ſeems to mean, in the mind of thoſe who uſe it, a woman who has ſtepped into the vacant place of the true mother.]

How ſhould their minds chuſe but miſdoubt, lest this diſcipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true ſiſter, be found unto all kinds of knowledge a ſtep-mother? Hooker.

His wanton ſtep-dame loved him the more;
But, when ſhe ſaw her offer'd ſweets refuſe,
Her love ſhe turn'd to hate. Spenſer.

You ſhall not find me, daughter,
After the ſlander of moſt ſtep-mothers,
Ill-eyed unto you. Shakſpeare.

A father cruel, and a ſtep-dame falſe. Shakſpeare.

Cato, the elder, being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman: his ſon came to him, and ſaid, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a ſtep-mother into your houſe? The old man anſwered, Nay, quite the contrary, ſon, thou pleaſeſt me ſo well, as I would be glad to have more ſuch. Bacon.

The name of ſtep-dame, your practis'd art,
By which you have eſtrang'd my father's heart,
All you have done againſt me, or deſign,
Shows your averſion, but begets not mine. Dryden.

A ſtep-dame too I have, a curſed ſhe,
Who rules my hen-peck'd ſire, and orders me. Dryden.

Any body would have gueſſed miſs to have been bred up under the influence of a cruel ſtep-dame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbuthnot.

STE'PPINGSTONE. n. ſ. [ſtep and ſtone.] Stone laid to catch the foot, and ſave it from wet or dirt.

Like ſtepping ſtones to ſave a ſtride,
In ſtreets where kennels are too wide. Swift.

STERCORA'CEOUS. adj. [ſtercoraceus, Lat.] Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung.

Green juicy vegetables, in a heap together, acquire a heat equal to that of a human body; then a putrid ſtercoraceous taſte and odour, in taſte reſembling putrid fleſh, and in ſmell human feces. Arbuthnot.

STERCORA'TION. n. ſ. [from ſtercora, Lat.] The act of dunging; the act of manuring with dung.

The firſt help is ſtercoration: the ſheeps dung is one of the beſt, and the next, dung of kine, and that of horſes. Bacon.

The exterior pulp of the fruit ſerves not only for the ſecurity of the ſeed, whilſt it hangs on the plant, but, after it is fallen upon the earth, for the ſtercoration of the ſoil, and promotes the growth, though not the firſt germination of the ſeminal plant. Ray.

STEREO'GRAPHY. n. ſ. [στερεὸς and γράφω; ſtereographie, French.] The art of drawing the forms of ſolids upon a plane. Harris.

STE'RIL. adj. [ſterile, French; ſterilis, Latin.] Barren; unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chafe,
Shake off their steril curse. Shakspeare.
The sea merge steril, and rocky hard. Shaksp.
In very steril years, corn sown will grow to another kind. Bacon.
To separate seeds, put them in water: such as are corrupted and steril swim. Brown.
She is grown steril and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable. More.
When the vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile and mineral matter, such as was inept for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

STERI'LITY. n. f. [sterilité, French; sterilitas, from sterilis, Latin.] Barrenness; want of fecundity; unfruitfulness.
Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and because their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories. Bacon.
An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of specifick gravity, if the Almighty had not said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit. Bentley.
He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in these reiterated verses. Pope.

To STE'RILIZE. v. a. [from steril.] To make barren; to deprive of fecundity, or the power of production.
May we not as well suppose the sterilizing the earth was suspended for some time, till the deluge became the executioner of it? Woodward.
Go! sterilize the fertile with thy rage. Savage.

STE'RLING. adj. [Of this word many derivations have been offered; the most probable of which is that offered by Camden, who derives it from the Easterlings, who were employed as coiners.]
1. An epithet by which genuine English money is discriminated.
The king's treasure, that he left at his death, amounted unto eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling. Bacon.
Several of them would rather chuse to count out a sum in fetterees than in pounds sterling. Addison.
2. Genuine; having passed the test.
There is not one single witty phrase in this collection, which hath not received the stamp and approbation of one hundred years: he may therefore be secure to find them all genuine, sterling, and authentick. Swift.

STE'RLING. n. f. [sterlingum, low Latin, from the adjective.]
1. English coin; money.
His visionary various projects tries,
And knows that to be rich is to be wise:
By useful observation he can tell
The sacred charms that in true sterling dwell;
How gold makes a patrician of a slave,
A dwarf an Atlas, a Thersites brave. Garth.
Great name! which in our rolls recorded stands,
Leads honours, and protects the learned bands,
Accept this offering to thy bounty due,
And Roman wealth in English sterling view.
C. Arbuthnot.
2. Standard rate.

STERN. adj. [ꝑeyrn, Saxon.]
1. Severe of countenance; truculent of aspect.
Why look you still so stern and tragical. Shaksp.
I would outstare the sternest eyes that look,
Outbrave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. Shakspeare.
It shall not be amiss here to present the stern but lively countenance of this so famous a man. Knolles.
Gods and men
Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o' th' woods. Milton.
The judge supreme soon cast a stedfast eye,
Stern, yet attemper'd with benignity. Harte.
2. Severe of manners; harsh; unrelenting; cruel.
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou, stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakspeare.
The common executioner,
Whose heart th' accustom'd sight of death makes hard,
Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be
Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops? Shakspeare.
Did thus in Cæsar seem ambitious?
When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept;
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff. Shaksp.
Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife
Immortal, be the business of my life;
And in thy fame, the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof my banner shall be hung. Dryden.
How, stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.
3. Hard; afflictive.
If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key,
All cruels else subscribe'd. Shakspeare.
Mitchele flood,
And with his stern fleele drew in streames the blood. Chapman.

STERN. n. f. [ꝑeopn, Saxon: of the same original with steer.]
1. The hind part of the ship where the rudder is placed.
Let a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, as the prow and stern, the ribs, masts, ropes, and shrouds, he would form but a very lame idea of it. Watts.
They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land. Dryden.

Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still. Shakspeare.

STE'RNLY. adv. [from stern.] In a stern manner; severely; truculently.
No mountaine lion tore
Two lambs so sternly. Chapman.
Sternly he pronounc'd
The rigid interdiction. Milton.
Yet sure thou art not, nor thy face the same,
Nor thy limbs moulded in so soft a frame;
Thou look'st more sternly, dost more strongly move,
And more of awe thou bear'st, and less of love. Dry.

STE'RNNESS. n. f. [from stern.]
1. Severity of look.
Of stature huge, and eke of courage bold,
That sons of men amaz'd their sternness do behold. Spenser.
How would he look, to see his work so noble
Wildly bound up! or how
Should I, in these my borrow'd flaunts, behold
The sternness of his presence! Shakspeare.
2. Severity or harshness of manners.
I have sternness in my soul enough
To bear of soldiers work. Dryden.

STEW. n. f. [étuve, Fr. stufa, Ital. estufa, Spanish.]
1. A bagnio; a hothouse.
As burning Ætna from his boiling stew
Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enwrapt in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke Spenser.
The Lydians were inhibited by Cyrus to use any armour, and give themselves to baths and stews. Abbot.
2. A brothel; a house of prostitution. [This signification is by some imputed to this, that there were licensed brothels near the stews or fishponds in Southwark; but probably stew, like bagnio, took a bad signification from bad use. It may be doubted whether it has any singular. South uses it in a plural termination with a singular sense. Shakspeare makes it singular.]
There be that hate harlots, and never were at the stews; that abhor falsehood, and never brake promise. Ascham.
I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
Till it o'er-run the stew. Shakspeare.
With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, nor curtesans. Bacon.
Her, though few'n years she in the stews had laid,
A nunnery durst receive and think a maid;
And, though in childbirth's labour she did lie,
Midwives would swear 'twere but a tympany. Donne.
What mad'rate fop would take the park or stews,
Who among troops of taintless nymphs can choose? Rochester.
Making his own house a stews, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to instil the rudiments of vice into the unwary flexible years of his poor children. South.

STE'WARD. n. f. [ꝑtiġeapd, Saxon.]
1. One who manages the affairs of another.
There sat, yclad in red
Down to the ground, a comely personage,
That in his hand a white rod managed;
He steward was, high dight, ripe of age,
And in demeanour sober, and in council sage. Spenser.
Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still. Shakspeare.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shakspeare

How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest be no longer steward. Luke.

Improve all those talents the providence of God hath intrusted us with, because we are but stewards, and must give an account of them. Nelson.

When a steward defrauds his lord, he must connive at the rest of the servants while they are following the same practice. Swift.

What can be a greater honour, than to be chosen one of the stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to mankind? What can give a generous spirit more complacency, than to consider that great numbers owe to him, under God, their subsistence, and the good conduct of their lives. Swift.

Just steward of the bounty he receiv'd,
And dying poorer than the poor reliev'd. Haste

2. An officer of state.

The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims

Some honour of your own acquire;
Add to that stock, which justly we bestow,
Of those blest shades to whom you all things owe. Dryden.

Yet was she not profuse, but fear'd to waste,
And wisely manag'd that the stock might last;
That all might be supplied, and she not grieve,
When crowds appear'd, she had not to relieve;
Which to prevent, she still increas'd her store;
Laid up, and spar'd, that she might give the more. Dryden.

Beneath one law bees live,
And with one common stock their traffick drive:
All is the state's, the state provides for all. Dryden.

Nor do those ills on single bodies prey;
But oftner bring the nation to decay,
And sweep the present stock and future hope away. Dryden.

If parents die without actually transferring their right to another, why does it not return to the common stock of mankind? Locke.

When we brought it out, it took such a quantity of air into its lungs, that it swelled almost twice as big as before; and it was perhaps on this stock of air that it lived a minute longer the second time. Addison.

To STONE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To pelt, or beat, or kill with ſtones.
Theſe people be almoſt ready to ſtone me. Exodus.
Crucifixion was a puniſhment unknown to the Jewiſh laws, among whom the ſtoning to death was the puniſhment for blaſphemy. Stephens.
2. To harden.

Oh pardon me thou bleeding piece of earth,
That I am meek and gentle with these butchers!
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,
(Which like dumb mouths do ope their ruby lips,
To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue)
A curse shall light upon the limbs of men;
Domestick fury and fierce civil strife
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy;
Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
And dreadful objects so familiar,
That mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war;
All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds:
And Cæsar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Ate by his side come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines with a monarch's voice
Cry havock, and let slip the dogs of war,
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men, groaning for burial. Shakesp.

Sto'ny. adj. [from stone.]

1. Made of stone.

Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakesp.

With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls;
For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shakspeare.

Nor slept the winds
Within their stony caves, but rush'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vast wilderness, whose tallest pines,
Though rooted deep as high and sturdiest oaks,
Bow'd their stiff necks, loaden with stormy blasts,
Or torn up sheer. Milton.

Here the marshy grounds approach your fields,
And there the soil a stony harvest yields Dryden.

As in spires he stood, he turn'd to stone;
The stony snake retain'd the figure still his own.

Thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch
Uncapable of pity. Shakspeare.

Eight yards of uneven ground is threescore and ten miles a-foot with me, and the stony-hearted villains know it. Shakspeare.

At this sight
My heart is turn'd to stone; and, while 'tis mine,
It shall be stony. Shakspeare.

I will clear their senses dark,
What may suffice, and soften stony hearts,
To pray, repent, and bring obedience due. Milton.

Indiff'rence, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt? Swift.

Stood. The preterit of To stand.

Adam, at the news,
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood.
Milton.

Stool. n. f. [stol, Gothick; ꝥeol, Sax. stoel, Dutch.]

1. A seat without a back, so distinguished from a chair.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back. Watts.

Thou fearful fool,
Why takest not of the fame fruit of gold?
Ne sittest down on that fame silver stool,
To rest thy weary person in the shadow cold?
Spenser.

Now which were wife, and which were fools?
Poor Alma sits between two stools;
The more she reads, the more perplext. Prior.

2. Evacuation by purgative medicines.

There be medicines that move stools, and not urine; some other urine, and not stools: those that purge by stool, are such as enter not at all, or little, into the meletery veins; but either at the first are not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts; or else are afterwards rejected by the meletery veins, and so turn likewise downwards to the guts. Bacon.

The peristaltick motion, or repeated changes of contraction and dilatation, is not in the lower guts, else one would have a continual needing of going to stool. Arbuthnot.

3. Stool of Repentance, or Cutty Stool, in the kirks of Scotland, is somewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In some places there may be a seat in it; but it is generally without, and the person stands therein, who has been guilty of fornication, for three Sundays, in the forenoon; and after sermon is called upon by name and surname, the beadle or kirk-officer bringing the offender, if refractory, forward to his post; and then the preacher proceeds to admonition. Here too are set to publick view adulterers; only these are habited in a coarse canvass, analogous to a hairy or monastick vest, with a hood to it, which they call the sack, or sackcloth; and that every Sunday throughout a year, or longer.

Unequal and unreasonable judgment of things, brings many a great man to the stool of repentance. L'Estrange.

Sto'olball. n. f. [stool and ball.] A play where balls are driven from stool to stool.

While Betty dances on the green,
And Susan is at stoolball seen. Prior.

To Stoop. v. n. [ꝥupian, Sax. stuypen, Dutch.]

1. To bend down; to bend forward.

Like unto the bough of this tree, he bended downward, and stooped toward the earth. Raleigh.

2. To lean forward standing or walking.

When Pelopidas and Ismenias were sent to Artaxerxes, Pelopidas did nothing unworthy; but Ismenias let fall his ring to the ground, and, stooping for theft, was thought to make his adoration. Stilling fl.

He stooping open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib. Milton.

3. To yield; to bend; to submit.

I am the son of Henry the fifth,
Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop.
Shakspeare.

Mighty in her ships stood Carthage long,
And swept the riches of the world from far;
Yet stoop'd to Rome, less wealthy, but more strong.
Dryden.

4. To descend from rank or dignity.

Where men of great wealth stoop to husbandry, it multiplieth riches exceedingly. Bacon.

He that condescended so far, and stooped so low, to invite and to bring us to heaven, will not refuse us a gracious reception there. Boyle.

5. To yield; to be inferiour.

Death his death-wound shall then receive,
And stoop inglorious. Milton.

These are arts, my prince,
In which your Zama does not stoop to Rome. Addis.

6. To sink from resolution or superiority; to condescend.

They, whose authority is required unto the satisfying of your demand, do think it both dangerous to admit such concourse of divided minds; and unmeet that their laws, which, being once solemnly established, are to exact obedience of all men, and to constrain thereunto, should so far stoop as to hold themselves in suspence from taking any effect upon you, till some disputer can persuade you to be obedient. Hooker.

7. To come down on prey as a falcon.

The bird of Jove stoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove. Milt.

8. To alight from the wing.

Satan ready now
To stoop with wearied wings and willing feet,
On the bare outside of this world. Milton.

Twelve swans behold in beauteous order move,
And stoop with closing pinions from above. Dryden.

9. To sink to a lower place.

Cow'ring low
With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing.
Milton.

Stoop. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of stooping; inclination downward.

2. Descent from dignity or superiority.

Can any loyal subject see
With patience such a stoop from sovereignty?
An ocean pour'd upon a narrow brook? Dryden.

3. Fall of a bird upon his prey.

Now will I wander through the air,
Mount, make a stoop at every fair. Waller.

An eagle made a stoop at him in the middle of his exaltation, and carried him away. L'Estrange.

4. [ꝥeoppa, Sax. stoope, Dutch.] A vessel of liquor.

Come, lieutenant, I have a stoop of wine; and here without are a brace of gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of Othello. Shakspeare.

There is nothing more in me, sir, but may be squeezed out without racking, only a stoop or two of wine. Denham.

A caldron of fat beef, and stoop of ale,
On the huzzaing mob shall more prevail,
Than if you give them, with the nicest art,
Ragousts of peacocks brains, or filbert tart. King.

Sto'opingly. adv. [from stooping.] With inclination downward.

Nani was noted to tread softly, to walk stoopingly, and raise himself from benches with laborious gesture. Wotton.

To Stop. v. a. [estouper, French; stoppare, Italian; stoppen, Dutch.]

1. To hinder from progressive motion.

From the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had Shall stop or spurn me. Shakspeare.

2. To hinder from successive operation.
Can any dresse find a way
To stop th' approaches of decay,
And mend a ruin'd face? Dorset.

3. To hinder from any change of state, whether to better or worse.

4. To hinder from action or practice.
Friend, 'tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd. Shakspeare.
As the truth of Christ is in me, no man shall stop me of this boasting. 2 Corinthians.

5. To put an end to the motion or action of any thing; to intercept.
Almon falls,
Pierc'd with an arrow from the distant war:
Fix'd in his throat the flying weapon stood,
And stopp'd his breath, and drank his vital blood.
Dryden.

6. To repress; to suspend.
Every bold sinner, when about to engage in the commission of any known sin, should arrest his confidence, and stop the execution of his purpose with this question: Do I believe that God has denounced death to such a practice, or do I not? South.

7. To suppress.
He, on occasion of stopping my play, did me a good office at court, by representing it as long ago designed. Dryden.

8. To regulate musical strings with the fingers.
In instruments of strings, if you stop a string high, whereby it hath less scope to tremble, the sound is more treble, but yet more dead. Bacon.

9. To close an aperture.
Smite every fenced city, stop all wells of water, and mar land with stones. 2 Kings.
They pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear. Zech.
A hawk's bell, the hole stopped up, hung by a thread within a bottle-glass, and stop the glass close with wax. Bacon.
His majesty stopped a leak that did much harm. Bacon.
Stoppings and suffocations are dangerous in the body. Bacon.
They first raised an army with this design, to stop my mouth, or force my consent. King Charles.
Celsus gives a precept about bleeding, that when the blood is good, which is to be judged by the colour, that immediately the vein should be stopped. Arbuthnot.

10. To obstruct; to encumber.
Mountains of ice that stop th' imagin'd way. Milton.

11. To garnish with proper punctuation.

To STOP. v. n.

1. To cease to go forward.
Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into fast gait, then stops again. Shakf.
When men pursue their thoughts of space, they stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end. Locke.
If the rude throng pour on with furious pace,
And hap to break thee from a friend's embrace,
Stop short, nor struggle through. Gay.

2. To cease from any course of action.
Encroachments are made by degrees from one step to another; and the best time to stop is at the beginning. Lesley.

STOP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Cessation of progressive motion.
Thought's the slave of time, and life time's fool;
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. Shakspeare.
The marigold, whose courtier's face
Eechoes the sun, and doth unlace
Her at his rise, at his full stop
Packs and shuts up her gaudy shop. Cleaveland.
A lion, ranging for his prey, made a stop on a sudden, at a hideous yelling noise which startled him. L'Estrange.

2. Hinderance of progress; obstruction; act of stopping.
In weak and tender minds we little know what misery this strict opinion would breed, besides the stops it would make in the whole course of all men's lives and actions. Hooker.
These gates are not sufficient for the communication between the walled city and its suburbs, as daily appears by the stops and embarrasses of coaches near both these gates. Graunt.
My praise the Fabii claim,
And thou, great hero, greatest of thy name,
Ordain'd in war to save the sinking state,
And, by delays, to put a stop to fate. Dryden.
Occult qualities put a stop to the improvement of natural philosophy, and therefore have been rejected. Newton.
Brokers hinder trade, by making the circuit which the money goes larger, and in that circuit more stops, so that the returns must necessarily be slower and scantier. Locke.
Female zeal, though proceeding from so good a principle, if we may believe the French historians, often put a stop to the proceedings of their kings, which might have ended in a reformation. Addison.

3. Repression; hinderance of operation.
'Tis a great step towards the mastery of our desires, to give this stop to them, and shut them up in silence. Locke.

4. Cessation of action.
Look you to the guard to-night:
Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to outsport discretion. Shakspeare.

5. Interruption.
Thou art full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath;
Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more.
Shakspeare.

6. Prohibition of sale.
If they should open a war, they foresee the consumption France must fall into by the stop of their wine and salts, wholly taken off by our two nations. Temple.

7. That which obstructs; obstacle; impediment.
The proud Duessa, full of wrathful spight
And fierce disdain to be affronted so,
Inforc'd her purple beast with all her might,
That stop out of the way to overthrow. Spenser.
On indeed they went: but O! not far;
A fatal stop travers'd their headlong course. Daniel.
Blessed be that God who cast rubs, stops, and hindrances in my way, when I was attempting the commission of such a sin. South.
So melancholy a prospect should inspire us with zeal to oppose some stop to the rising torrent, and check this overflowing of ungodliness. Rogers.

8. Instrument by which the sounds of wind musick are regulated.
You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery. Shakspeare.
Blest are those,
Whose blood and judgment are so well commingled,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
To sound what stop she please. Shakspeare.
The harp
Had work, and rested not; the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton.
The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ; and who mov'd
Their stops, and chords, was seen; his volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursued transverse the resonant fugue.
Milton.
A variety of strings may be observed on their harps, and of stops on their tibiæ; which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who, from a short passage in a classick author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops. Addison.

9. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.
The further a string is strained, the less hyperstraining goeth to a note; for it requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note at all: and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.

10. The act of applying the stops in musick.
Th' organ-sound a time survives the stop,
Before it doth the dying note give up. Daniel.

11. A point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.
Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the tragick dooms of men,
Wet with tears still'd from the eyes
Of the flinty destinies,
Would have learn'd a softer style,
And have been asham'd to spoil
His life's sweet story by the haste
Of a cruel stop ill-plac'd. Crashaw.

STO'PCOCK. n. s. [stop and cock.] A pipe made to let out liquor, stopped by a turning cock.
No man could spit from him without it, but would drivel like some paralytick or fool; the tongue being as a stopcock to the air, till upon its removal the spittle is driven away. Grew.

STO'PGAP. n. s. [from stop and gap.] Something substituted; a temporary expedient.

STO'PPAGE. n. s. [from stop.] The act of stopping; the state of being stopped.

The stoppage of a cough, or spitting, increases phlegm in the stomach. Floyer.

STO'PPLE or Stopper. n. s. [from stop.] That by which any hole, or the mouth of any vessel, is filled up.
Bottles swinged, or carried in a wheel-barrow upon rough ground, fill not full, but leave some air; for if the liquor come close to the stopple, it cannot flower. Bacon.
There were no shuts or stopples made for the ears, that any loud or sharp noise might awaken it, as also a soft and gentle murmur provoke it to sleep. Ray.

STO'RAX. n. s. [styrax, Latin.]
1. A plant.
2. A resinous and odoriferous gum.
I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrrh, as galbanum, and sweet storax. Ecclesiasticus.

STORE. n. s. [stór, in old Swedish and Runick, is much, and is prefixed to other words to intend their signification; stor, Danish; stoor, Islandick, is great. The Teutonick dialects nearer to English seem not to have retained this word.]
1. Large number; large quantity; plenty.
The ships are fraught with store of victuals, and good quantity of treasure. Bacon.
None yet, but store hereafter from the earth
Up hither like aerial vapours flew,
Of all things transitory and vain, when sin,
With vanity had fill'd the works of men. Milton.
Jove grant me length of life, and years good store
Heap on my bended back. Dryden.

2. A stock accumulated; a supply hoarded.
We liv'd supine amidst our flowing store,
We slept securely, and we dreamt of more. Dryd.
Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiast from her sacred store
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds. Dryden.
Thee, goddess, thee, Britannia's isle adores:
How has she oft exhausted all her stores!
How oft in fields of death thy presence sought,
Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought! Addison.
Their minds are richly fraught
With philosophick stores. Thomson.

3. The ſtate of being accumulated; hoard.
Is not this laid up in ſtore with me, and ſealed up among my treaſures? Deuteronomy.

4. Storehouſe; magazine.

Concocted and aduſted, they reduc'd
To blackeſt grain, and into ſtore convey'd. Milton.

STORE. adj. Hoarded; laid up; accumulated.
What floods of treaſure have flowed into Europe by that action, ſo that the cauſe of chriſtendom is raiſed ſince twenty times told: of this treaſure the gold was accumulate and ſtore treaſure; but the river is ſtill growing. Bacon.

To STORE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furniſh; to repleniſh.
Wiſe Plato ſaid the world with men was ſtor'd,
That ſuccour each to other might afford. Denham.
Her face with thouſand beauties bleſt;
Her mind with thouſand virtues ſtor'd;
Her power with boundleſs joy confeſt,
Her perſon only not ador'd. Prior.

2. To ſtock againſt a future time.
Some were of opinion that it were beſt to ſtay where they were, until more aid and ſtore of victuals were come; but others find the enemy were but barely ſtored with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out. Knolles.
One having ſtored a pond of four acres with carps, tench, and other fiſh, and only put in two ſmall pikes, at ſeven years end, upon the draught, not one fiſh was left, but the two pikes grown to an exceſſive bigneſs. Hale.
The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by ſenſation, and thereby ſtores itſelf with a new ſet of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection. Locke.
To ſtore the veſſel let the care be mine
With water from the rocks, and roſy wine,
And life-ſuſtaining bread. Pope.

3. To lay up; to hoard.
Let the main part of the corn be a common ſtock, laid in and ſtored up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon.

STO'REHOUSE. n. ſ. [ſtore and houſe.]

1. Magazine; treaſury; place in which things are hoarded and repoſited againſt a time of uſe.
By us it is willingly confeſſed, that the ſcripture of God is a ſtorehouſe abounding with ineſtimable treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, in many kinds over and above things in this kind barely neceſſary. Hooker.
Suffer us to famiſh, and their ſtorehouſes cramm'd with grain! Shakſpeare.
Joſeph opened all the ſtorehouſes, and ſold unto the Egyptians. Geneſis.
To theſe high pow'rs a ſtorehouſe doth pertain,
Where they all arts and gen'ral reaſons lay;
Which in the ſoul, ev'n after death, remain,
And no Lethean blood can waſh away. Davies.
My heart hath been a ſtorehouſe long of things
And ſayings laid up, portending ſtrange events. Milton.
The image of God was reſplendent in man's practical underſtanding, that ſtorehouſe of the ſoul, in which are treaſured up the rules of action and the ſeeds of morality. South.
As many different ſounds as can be made by ſingle articulations, ſo many letters there are in the ſtorehouſe of nature. Holder.

2. A great maſs repoſited.
They greatly joyed merry tales to feign,
Of which a ſtorehouſe did with her remain. F. Qu.

STO'RER. n. ſ. [from ſtore.] One who lays up.

STO'RIED. adj. [from ſtory.] Furniſhed with ſtories; adorned with hiſtorical pictures.
Let my due feet never fail
To walk the ſtudious cloiſters pale,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar, maſſy proof;
And ſtoried windows, richly dight,
Caſting a dim religious light. Milton.
Some greedy minion or imperious wife
The trophied arches, ſtoried halls, invade. Pope.

STORK. n. ſ. [ſtonc, Saxon; ciconia, Lat.] A bird of paſſage, famous for the regularity of its departure.
Its beak and legs are long and red; it feeds upon ſerpents, frogs, and inſects: its plumage would be quite white, were not the extremity of its wings, and alſo ſome part of its head and thighs, black: it ſits for thirty days, and lays but four eggs: they go away in the middle of Auguſt, and return in ſpring. Calmet.
The ſtork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times. Jeremiah.
Who bid the ſtork, Columbus like, explore
Heavens not his own, and worlds unknown before?
Who calls the council, ſtates the certain day,
Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way? Pope.

STO'RKSBILL. n. ſ. [geranium, Lat.] An herb. Amſworth.

STORM. n. ſ. [yſtorm, Welſh; ſtopm, Saxon; ſtorm, Dutch; ſtormo, Italian.]

1. A tempeſt; a commotion of the elements.
O turn thy rudder hitherward a while,
Here may thy ſtorm-beat veſſel ſafely ride. Spenſer.
We hear this fearful tempeſt ſing,
Yet ſeek no ſhelter to avoid the ſtorm. Shakſpeare.
Them ſhe upſtays, mindleſs the while
Herſelf, though faireſt unſupported flower,
From her beſt prop ſo far, and ſtorm ſo nigh. Milton.
Sulphurous hail ſhot after us in ſtorm. Milton.
Then ſtay, my child! ſtorms beat, and rolls the main;
Oh beat thoſe ſtorms, and roll the ſeas, in vain! Pope.

2. Aſſault on a fortified place.
How by ſtorm the walls were won,
Or how the victor ſack'd and burnt the town. Dryd.

3. Commotion; ſedition; tumult; clamour; buſtle.

Thee I have heard relating what was done
Ere my remembrance: now hear me relate
My ſtory, which perhaps thou haſt not heard. Milt.
The four great monarchies make the ſubject of ancient ſtory, and are related by the Greek and Latin authors. Temple.
Matters of fact, concerning times, places, perſons, actions, which depend upon ſtory, and the relation of others, theſe things are not capable of being proved by ſuch ſcientifical principles. Wilkins.
Governments that once made ſuch a noiſe, as founded upon the deepeſt counſels and the ſtrongeſt force, yet by ſome ſlight miſcarriage, which let in ruin upon them, are now ſo utterly extinct, that nothing remains of them but a name; nor are there the leaſt traces of them to be found, but only in ſtory. South.

2. Small tale; petty narrative; account of a ſingle incident.
In the road between Berne and Soleure, a monument erected by the republick of Berne tells us the ſtory of an Engliſhman not to be met with in any of our own writers. Addiſon.

3. An idle or trifling tale; a petty fiction.
Theſe flaws and ſtarts would well become
A woman's ſtory at a winter's fire,
Authoris'd by her grandame. Shakſpeare.
This ſcene had ſome bold Greek or Britiſh bard
Beheld of old, what ſtories had we heard
Of fairies, ſatyrs, and the nymphs their dames,
Then feats, their revels, and their am'rous flames! Denham.
My maid left on the table one of her ſtory books, which I found full of ſtrange impertinence, of poor ſervants who came to be ladies. Swift.

4. [ſtœn, place, Saxon.] A floor; a flight of rooms.
Avoid enormous heights of ſeven ſtories, and the contrary fault of low diſtended fronts. Wotton.
Sonnets or elegies to Chloris
Might raiſe a houſe about two ſtories;
A lyrick ode would ſtate; a catch
Would tile; an epigram would thatch. Swift.

To STORY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tell in hiſtory; to relate.
How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than ſtory him in his own hearing. Shakſp.
'Tis not vain or fabulous
What the ſage poets, taught by th' heavenly muſe,
Storied of old in high immortal verſe,
Of dire chimeras and enchanted iſles,
And rifted rocks whoſe entrance leads to hell. Milton.
It is ſtoried of the brazen Coloſſus, in the iſland of Rhodes, that it was ſeventy cubits high; the thumbs of it being ſo big, that no man could graſp one of them with both his arms. Wilkins.
Recite them, nor in erring pity ſpare
To wound with ſtoried griefs the filial ear. Pope.

2. To range one under another.
Becauſe all the parts of an undiſturbed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or ſtoried according to the difference of it, any concretion that can be ſuppoſed to be naturally and mechanically made in ſuch a fluid, muſt have a like ſtructure of its ſeveral parts; that is, either be all over of a ſimilar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its baſis. Bentley.

STO'RYTELLER. n. ſ. [ſtory and tell.] One who relates tales in converſation; a hiſtorian, in contempt.
In ſuch a ſatire all would ſeek a ſhare,
And every fool will fancy he is there;
Old ſtorytellers too muſt pine and die,
To ſee their antiquated wit laid by;
Like her, who miſs'd her name in a lampoon,
And griev'd to find herſelf decay'd ſo ſoon. Dryden.
Company will be no longer peſtered with dull, dry, tedious ſtorytellers. Swift.

STOVE. n. ſ. [ſtof, Iſlandick, a fire-place; ſtopa, Saxon; eſtuve, French; ſtove, Dutch.]

2. A hothouse; a place artificially made warm.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice, to dip up such fish with their nets as resort thither for breathing, light on swallows congealed in clods of a slimy substance, and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth recovereth them to life and flight. Carew.

Stoves, which could autumn of cold winter make, Fountains in autumn to bring winter back. Beaum.

The heat which arises out of the lesser spiracles brings forth nitre and sulphur; some of which it affixes to the tops and sides of the grottos, which are usually so hot as to serve for natural stoves or sweating-vaults. Woodward.

The most proper place for unction is a stove. Wiseman.

2. A place in which fire is made, and by which heat is communicated.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, in your great house kindle some charcoals; and when they have done smoaking, put them into a hole sunk a little into the floor, about the middle of it. This is the safest stove. Evelyn.

To STOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To keep warm in a house artificially heated.

For December, January, and the latter part of November, take such things as are green all winter; orange trees, lemon trees, and myrtles, if they be stoved; and sweet marjoram warm set. Bacon.

To STOUND. v. n. [stunde, I grieved, Islandick.]

1. To be in pain or sorrow. Out of use.

2. For stunned.

STOUND. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Sorrow; grief; mishap. Out of use. The Scots retain it.

Begin and end the bitter baleful stound,
If less than that I fear. Spenser.

The fox his copesmate found,
To whom complaining his unhappy stound,
He with him far'd some better chance to find. Spenser.

2. Astonishment; amazement.

Thus we stood, as in a stound,
And wet with tears, like dew, the ground. Gay.

3. Hour; time; season.

STOUR. n. s. [stur, Runick, a battle; steoran, Saxon, to disturb.] Assault; incursion; tumult. Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stour,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heav'nly bow'r. Fairy Queen.

Love, that long since has to thy mighty powre
Per force subdued my poor captived heart,
And raging now therein with restless stowre,
Dost tyrannize in every weaker part. Spenser.

The giant struck so mainly merciless,
That could have overthrown a stonny tower;
And, were not heav'nly grace that him did bless,
He had been pouldered all as thin as flower,
But he was wary of that deadly stowre. Spenser.

STOUT. adj. [stout, Dutch; stolz, proud, German; stautan, Gothick, is to strike.]

1. Strong; lusty; valiant.

When I was young,
I do remember how my father said,
A stouter champion never handled sword. Shakſp.

Some captain of the land or fleet,
Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit,
Cries, I have sense to serve my turn, in store,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden.

2. Brave; bold; intrepid.

The stout-hearted are spoiled. Psalms.

He lost the character of a bold, stout, and magnanimous man, which he had been long reputed to be. Clarendon.

3. Obstinate; pertinacious; resolute; proud.

The lords all stand,
To clear their cause, most resolutely stout. Daniel.

There virtue and stout honour pass'd the guard,
Those only friends that could not be debarr'd. Buthuaſt.

4. Strong; firm.

The stoutest vessel to the storm gave way,
And suck'd through loosen'd planks the rushing sea. Dryden.

STOUT. n. s. A cant name for strong beer.

Should but his muse descending drop
A slice of bread and mutton chop,
Or kindly, when his credit's out,
Surprise him with a pint of stout;
Exalted in his mighty mind,
He flies and leaves the stars behind. Swift.

STOUTLY. adv. [from stout.] Lustily; boldly; obstinately.

STOUTNESS. n. s. [from stout.]

1. Strength; valour.

2. Boldness; fortitude.

His bashfulness in youth was the very true sign of his virtue and stoutness after. Aſcham.

3. Obstinacy; stubbornness.

Come all to ruin, let
Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness: for I mock at death
With as stout heart as thou. Shakſpeare.

To STOW. v. a. [stop, Saxon; stoc, old Frisick, a place; stowen, Dutch, to lay up.] To lay up; to repossite in order; to lay in the proper place.

Foul thief! where hast thou stow'd my daughter? Shakſpeare.

I' th' holsters of the saddle-bow
Two aged pistols he did stow. Hudibras.

Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides. Dryden.

All the patriots were beheaded, stowed in dungeons, or condemned to work in the mines. Addiſon.

The goddess shov'd the vessel from the shores,
And stow'd within its womb the naval stores. Pope.

So grieves th' advent'rous merchant, when he throws
All his long-toil'd-for treasure his ship stows
Into the angry main. Carew.

STOWAGE. n. s. [from stow.]

1. Room for laying up.

In every vessel is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion, or merchandize of as great a value. Addiſon.

2. The state of being laid up.

'Tis plate of rare device, and jewels
Of rich and exquisite form; their value's great;
And I am something curious, being strange,
To have them in safe stowage. Shakſpeare.

3. Money paid for stowing of goods.

STOWE, STOE, whether singly or jointly, are the same with the Saxon stop, a place. Gibſon.

STRABISM. n. s. [strabiſm, Fr. strabiſmus, Latin.] A squinting; act of looking asquint.

To STRADDLE. v. n. [supposed to come from straddle or stride.] To stand or walk with the feet removed far from each other to the right and left; to part the legs wide.

Let man survey himself, divested of artificial charms, and he will find himself a forked straddling animal, with bandy legs. Arbuthnot and Pope.

To STRAGGLE. v. a. [Of this word no etymology is known: it is probably a frequentative of stray, from stravviare, Italian, of extra viam, Latin.]

1. To wander without any certain direction; to rove; to ramble.

But stay; like one that thinks to bring his friend
A mile or two, and sees the journey's end,
I straggle on too far. Suckling.

A wolf spied out a straggling kid, and pursued him. L'Eſtrange.

Children, even when they endeavour their utmost, cannot keep their minds from straggling. Locke.

2. To wander dispersedly.

He likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity. Shakſpeare.

They found in Rosebridge one of the straggling soldiers, who out of weariness stayed behind. Clarendon.

Form straggling mountaineers, for public good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood;
Houses to build, and them contiguous make,
For cheerful neighbourhood and safety's sake. Tate.

3. To exuberate; to shoot too far.

Were they content to prune the lavish vine
Of straggling branches, and improve the wine.
Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge, that straggle too far out. Mortimer.

4. To be dispersed; to be apart from any main body; to stand single.

Having passed the Syrens, they came between Scylla and Charybdis, and the straggling rocks, which seemed to cast out great store of flames and smoke. Raleigh.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close
In streets, but here and there a straggling house.
Yet still he was at hand. Dryden.

STRAGGLER. n. s. [from straggle.]

1. A wanderer; a rover; one who forsakes his company; one who rambles without any settled direction.

The last should keep the countries from passage of stragglers from those parts, whence they use to come forth, and oftentimes use to work much mischief. Spenser.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars. Shakſpeare.

Bottles missing are supposed to be half stolen by stragglers, and the other half broken. Swift.

2. Any thing that pushes beyond the rest, or stands single.

Let thy hand supply the pruning knife,
And crop luxuriant stragglers, nor be loth
To strip the branches of their leafy growth. Dryden.

His pruning hook corrects the vines,
And the loose stragglers to their ranks confines. Pope.

STRAIGHT. adj. [strack, old Dutch. It is well observed by Ainſworth, that for not crooked we ought to write straight, and for narrow, strait; but for streight, which is sometimes found, there is no good authority.]

1. Not crooked; right.

Beauty made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speak; feature, laming
The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva. Shakſpeare.

A hunter's horn and cornet is oblique; yet they have likewise straight horns; which, if they be of the same bore with the oblique, differ little in sound, save that the straight require somewhat a stronger blast. Bacon.

There are many several sorts of crooked lines, but there is one only which is straight. Dryden.

Water and air the varied form confound;
The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round. Prior.

When I see a strait staff appear crooked while half under the water, the water gives me a false idea. Watts.

2. Narrow; close. This should properly be strait. [estroit, Fr. See STRAIT.]

Queen Elizabeth used to say of her instructions to great officers, that they were like to garments straight at the first putting on, but did by and by wear loose enough. Bacon.

3. Tense; tight. Of this sense it is doubtful whether it belongs to strait, close, narrow; or to straight, not crooked. Pull the cord straight, may mean, draw it till it has no flexure; tie it strait about you, may mean, draw it into a narrower compass. This ambiguity has perhaps confounded the orthography.

STRAIGHT. adv. [strax, Danish; straks, Dutch.] Immediately; directly. This ſtate is naturally derived from the adjective, as a ſtraight line is the ſhorteſt line between two points.

If the devil come and roar for them,
I will not ſend them. I will after ſtraight,
And tell him ſo. Shakſpeare.

Thoſe ſtinks which the noſtrils ſtraight abhor and expel, are not the moſt pernicious. Bacon.

With chalk I firſt deſcribe a circle here,
Where the aetherial ſpirits muſt appear:
Come in, come in: for here they will be ſtrait:
Around, around the place I fumigate. Dryden.

I know thy generous temper well;
Fling but the appearance of diſhonour on it,
It ſtraight takes fire, and mounts into a blaze.
Addiſon.

To STRAI'GHTEN. v. a. [from ſtraight.]

1. To make not crooked; to make ſtraight.

A crooked ſtick is not ſtraightened, except it be as far bent on the clean contrary ſide. Hooker.

Of ourſelves being ſo apt to err, the only way which we have to ſtraighten our paths is, by following the rule of his will, whoſe footſteps naturally are right. Hooker.

2. To make tenſe; to tighten.

STRAI'GHTLY. adv. [from ſtraight.]

1. In a right line; not crookedly.
2. Tightly; with tenſion.

STRAI'GHTNESS. n. ſ. [from ſtraight.]

Some are for maſts, as fir and pine, becauſe of their length and ſtraightneſs. Bacon.

2. Tenſion; tightneſs.

STRAI'GHTWAY. adv. [ſtraight and way. It is very often written ſtraightways, and therefore is perhaps more properly written ſtraightwiſe.] Immediately; ſtraight.

Let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or ſtraightway on that laſt long voyage fare.
Spenſer.

Soon as he enter'd was, the door ſtraightway
Did ſhut. Spenſer.

Like to a ſhip, that, having 'ſcap'd a tempeſt,
Is ſtraightway claim'd and boarded with a pirate.
Shakſpeare.

The Turks ſtraightway breaking in upon them, made a bloody fight. Knolles.

As ſoon as iron is out of the fire, it deadeth ſtraightways. Bacon.

The ſound of a bell is ſtrong; continueth ſome time after the percuſſion; but ceaſeth ſtraightways if the bell or ſtring be touched. Bacon.

The ſun's power being in thoſe months greater, it then ſtraightways hurries ſteams up into the atmoſphere. Woodward.

3. To ſqueeze in an embrace.

I would have ſtrain'd him with a ſtrict embrace;
But through my arms he ſlipt and vaniſh'd. Dryden.

Old Evander with a cloſe embrace
Strain'd his departing friend, and tears o'erflow'd his face. Dryden.

4. To ſprain; to weaken by too much violence.

The jury make no more ſcruple to paſs againſt an Engliſhman and the queen, though it be to ſtrain their oaths, than to drink milk unſtrained. Spenſer.

Prudes decay'd about may tack,
Strain their necks with looking back. Swift.

5. To put to its utmoſt ſtrength.

By this we ſee, in a cauſe of religion, to how deſperate adventures men will ſtrain themſelves for their own part, having law and authority again them. Hooker.

Too well I wote my humble vaine,
And how my rhimes been ragged and unkempt;
Yet as I con my cunning I will ſtrain. Spenſer.

Thus mine enemy fell,
And thus I ſet my foot on's neck;—even then
The princely blood flows in his cheek; he ſweats,
Strains his young nerves, and puts himſelf in poſture
That acts my words. Shakſpeare.

My earthly by his heavenly overpower'd,
Which it had long ſtood under, ſtrain'd to th' height
In that celeſtial colloquy ſublime,
As with an object that excels the ſenſe,
Dazzled and ſpent, ſunk down. Milton.

The lark and linnet ſing with rival notes;
They ſtrain their warbling throats
To welcome in the ſpring. Dryden.

Nor yet content, ſhe ſtrains her malice more,
And adds new ills to thoſe contriv'd before. Dryden.

It is the worſt ſort of good huſbandry for a father not to ſtrain himſelf a little for his ſon's breeding. Locke.

Our words flow from us in a ſmooth continued ſtream, without thoſe ſtrainings of the voice, motions of the body, and majeſty of the hand, which are ſo much celebrated in the orators of Greece and Rome. Atterbury.

Strain'd to the root, the ſtooping foreſt pours
A ruſtling ſhower of yet untimely leaves. Thomſon.

6. To make ſtraight or tenſe.

A bigger ſtring more ſtrained, and a leſſer ſtring leſs ſtrained, may fall into the ſame tone. Bacon.

Thou, the more he varies forms, beware,
To ſtrain his fetters with a ſtricter care. Dryden.

7. To puſh beyond the proper extent.

See they ſuffer death;
But in their deaths remember they are men,
Strain not the laws to make their torture grievous. Addiſon.

There can be no other meaning in this expreſſion, however ſome may pretend to ſtrain it. Swift.

Your way is to wreſt and ſtrain ſome principles, maintained both by them and me, to a ſenſe repugnant with their other known doctrines. Waterland.

8. To force; to conſtrain; to make uneaſy or unnatural.

The lark ſings ſo out of tune,
Straining harſh diſcords and unpleaſing ſharps. Shakſpeare.

He talks and plays with Fatima, but his mirth
Is forc'd and ſtrained: in his looks appears
A wild diſtracted fierceneſs. Denham.

To STRAIN. v. n.

1. To make violent efforts.

To build his fortune I will ſtrain a little,
For 'tis a bond in men. Shakſpeare.

You ſtand like greyhounds in the ſlips,
Straining upon the ſtart. Shakſpeare.

They ſtrain,
That death may not them idly find t' attend
Their certain lot, but work to meet their end.
Daniel.

Straining with too weak a wing,
We needs will write epiſtles to the king. Pope.

2. To be filtered by compreſſion.

Cæſar thought that all ten ſands had natural ſprings of freſh water; but it is the ſea-water; becauſe the pit filled according to the meaſure of the tide; and the ſea-water, paſſing or ſtraining through the ſands, leaveth the ſaltneſs behind them. Bacon.

STRAIN. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. An injury by too much violence.

Credit is gained by cuſtom, and ſeldom recovers a ſtrain; but, if broken, is never well ſet again. Temple.

In all pain there is a deformity by a ſolution of continuity, as in cutting; or a tendency to ſolution, as in convulſions or ſtrains. Grew.

2. [reenge, Saxon.] Race; generation; deſcent. Spenſer.

Thus far I can praiſe him; he is of a noble ſtrain,
Of approv'd valour. Shakſpeare.

Twelve Trojan youths, born of their nobleſt ſtrains,
I took alive; and, yet enrag'd, will empty all their veins
Of vital ſpirits. Chapman.

Why doſt thou falſely feign
Thyſelf a Sidney; from which noble ſtrain
He ſprung, that could to tar exalt the name
Of love. Waller.

Turn then to Pharamond and Charlemagne,
And the long heroes of the Gallic ſtrain. Prior.

Macrobius ſpeaks of Hippocrates' knowledge in very lofty ſtrains. Baker.

5. Song; note; ſound.

Wilt thou love ſuch a woman? what, to make thee an inſtrument, and play falſe ſtrains upon thee? Shakſpeare.

Orpheus' ſelf may heave his head
From golden ſlumber on a bed
Of heap'd Elyſian flowers, and hear
Such ſtrains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto, to have quite ſet free
His half-regain'd Eurydice. Milton

Their heavenly harps a lower ſtrain began,
And in ſoft muſick mourn the fall of man.
Dryden.

When the firſt bold veſſel dar'd the ſeas,
High on the ſtern the Thracian rais'd his ſtrain,
While Argo ſaw her kindred trees
Deſcend from Pelion to the main. Pope

Some future ſtrain, in which the muſe ſhall tell
How ſcience dwindles, add how volumes ſwell.
Young

Now ſpurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakſpeare.

What mean thoſe colour'd ſtreaks in heav'n,
Diſtended, as the brow of God appeas'd? Milton.

The night comes on, we eager to purſue
Till the laſt ſtreaks of dying day withdrew,
And doubtful moonlight did our rage deceive. Dryd

Ten wildings have I gather'd for my dear,
How ruddy, like your lips, their ſtreaks appear!
Dryden.

While the fantaſtick tulip ſtrives to break
In two-fold beauty, and a parted ſtreak. Prior.

To STREAK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ſtripe; to variegate in hues; to dapple.

All the yeanlings which were ſtreak'd and pied
Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakſpeare.

A mule admirably ſtreaked and dappled with white and black. Sandys.

To-morrow, ere freſh morning ſtreak the eaſt,
With firſt approach of light we muſt be riſ'n,
And at our pleaſant labour, to reform
Yon flow'ry arbours. Milton.

Now let us leave this earth, and lift our eye
To the large convex of yon' azure ſky;
Behold it like an ample curtain ſpread,
Now ſtreak'd and glowing with the morning red,
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chuſing ſable for the peaceful night. Prior.

2. To ſtretch. Obſolete.

She lurks in midſt of all her den, and ſtreaks
From out a ghaſtly whirlpool all her necks;
Where, glotting round her rock, to fiſh ſhe falls.
Chapman

STREA'KY. adj. [from ſtreak.] Striped; variegated by hues.

When the hoary head is hid in ſnow,
The life is in the leaf, and ſtill between
The fits of falling ſnows appears the ſtreaky green.
Dryden.

STREAM. n. ſ. [ꝑꝛeam, Saxon; ſtraum, Mandick; ſtroom, Dutch.]

1. A running water. The courſe of running water; current.

As plays the ſun upon the glaſſy ſtream,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam. Shakſp.

He brought ſtreams out of the rock, and caus'd waters to run down like rivers. Pſalms.

Cocytus nam'd, of lamentation loud
Heard in the rueful ſtream; fierce Phlegeton,
Whoſe waves of torrent fire inflame with rage;
Far off from theſe, a ſlow and ſilent ſtream,
Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her watry labyrinth. Milton.

O could I flow like thee, and make thy ſtream
My great example, as it is my theme!
Tho' deep yet clear, tho' gentle yet not dull,
Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full.
Denham.

Thus from one common ſource our ſtreams divide,
Our's is the Trojan, your's th' Arcadian ſide Dryd.
Divided intereſts, while thou think'ſt to sway,
Draw like two brooks thy muddle ſtream away.
Dryden.

2. Any thing iſſuing from a head, and moving forward with continuity of parts.

The breath of the Lord is like a ſtream of brimſtone. Iſaiah

You, Dances, never want a ſtream of words.
Dryden.

The ſtream of beneficence hath, by ſeveral rivulets which have ſince fallen into it, wonderfully enlarged its current. Atterbury.

3. Any thing forcible and continued.

Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and, being ſhort, the ſhips muſt have funk at an anchor in any ſtream of weather. Raleigh

It is looked upon as inſolence for a man to adhere to his own opinion, againſt the curre ſtream of antiquity. Locke.

4. Courſe; current.

The very ſtream of his life, and the buſineſs he hath helmed, muſt give him a better proclamation. Shakſpeare.

To STREAM. v. n. [ſtreyma, Iſlandick.]

1. To flow; to run in a continuous current.

God bad the ground be dry,
All but between thoſe banks where rivers now
Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train.
Milton.

On all ſides round
Streams the black blood, and ſmokes upon the ground. Pope.

2. To emit a current; to pour out water in a ſtream; to be overflown.

Then grateful Greece with ſtreaming eyes would raiſe
Hiſtorick marbles to record his praiſe. Pope.

3. To iſſue forth with continuance, not by fits.

Now to impartial love, that god moſt high,
Do my ſighs ſtream. Shakſpeare.

From opening ſkies may ſtreaming glories flame,
And ſaints embrace thee. Pope

To STREAM. v. a. To mark with colours or embroidery in long tracts.

The herald's mantle is ſtreamed with gold. Bacon.

STRE'AMER. n. ſ. [from ſtream.] An enſign; a flag; a pennon; any thing flowing looſely from a ſtock.

His brave fleet
With ſilken ſtreamers the young Phœbus fanning.
Shakſpeare.

The roſy morn began to riſe,
And wav'd her ſaffron ſtreamer through the ſkies.
Dryden.

Brave Rupert from afar appears,
Whoſe waving ſtreamers the glad general knows.
Dryden.

The man of ſenſe his meat devours,
But only ſmells the peel and ſlow'rs:
And he muſt be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the ſtreamer. Prior.

STRE'AMY. adj. [from ſtream.]

1. Abounding in running water.

Argolis
However strong now, polish'd and dry,
Denied the goddess water: where deep Melas
And rocky Cratis flow, the chariot smack'd
Obscure with rising dust. Prior.

2. Flowing with a current.
Before him flaming, his enormous shield
Like the broad sun illumin'd all the field;
His nodding helm emits a streamy ray. Pope

STREET. n. s. [ſtpæt, Saxon; ſtraz, German; ſtrada, Spaniſh and Italian; ſtræde, Daniſh; ſtract, Dutch; ſtratum, Latin.]

1. A way, properly a paved way between two rows of houſes.
He led us through fair ſtreets, and all the way we went there were gathered people on both ſides, ſtanding in a row. Bacon
The ſtreets are no larger than alleys. Sandys
When night
Darkens the ſtreets, then wander forth the ſons
Of Belial, flown with inſolence and wine;
Witneſs the ſtreets of Sodom. Milton
The Italians, ſay the ancients, always conſidered the ſituation of a building, whether it were high or low, in an open ſquare, or in a narrow ſtreet, and more or leſs deviated from their rule of art. Addiſon.
When you ſtuttle with ſome crony ſervant in the ſame ſtreet, leave your own ſtreet-door open. Swift

2. Proverbially, a publick place.
That there be no leading into captivity, and no complaining in our ſtreets. Pſalms
Our publick ways would be ſo crowded, that we ſhould want ſtreet-room. Spectator
Let us reflect upon what we daily ſee practiſed in the world; and can we believe, if an apoſtle of Chriſt appeared in our ſtreets he would retract his caution, and command us to be conformed to the world? Rogers

STRE'ETWALKER. n. ſ. [ſtreet and walk.] A common proſtitute, that offers herſelf to ſale in the open ſtreet.

STRENGTH. n. ſ. [ſtpenȝð, Saxon.]

1. Force; vigour; power of the body.
But ſtrength in truth divided, and from juſt,
Illaudable, nought merits but diſpraiſe. Milton.
Thou muſt outlive
Thy youth, thy ſtrength, thy beauty, which will change
To wither'd, weak, and grey. Milton.
Th' inſulting Troj'ans came,
And menace us with force, our fleet with flame:
Was it the ſtrength of this tongue-valiant lord,
In that black hour, that ſav'd you from the ſword?
Dryden.

2. Power of endurance; firmneſs; durability; toughneſs; hardneſs.
Not founded on the brittle ſtrength of bones. Milton.
Firm Doric pillars found the ſolid baſe,
The fair Corinthian crown the higher ſpace,
And all below is ſtrength, and all above is grace. Dryden.

3. Vigour of any kind; power of any kind.
Strength there muſt be either of love or war, even ſuch contrary ways leading to the ſame unity. Holyday.
God, in all things wiſe and juſt,
Hinder'd not Satan to attempt the mind
Of man, with ſtrength entire and free-will arm'd. Milton.
This act
Shall cruſh the ſtrength of Satan. Milton.

4. Power of reſiſtance; ſureneſs; faſtneſs.
Our caſtle's ſtrength
Will laugh a ſiege to ſcorn. Shakſpeare.

5. Support; ſecurity; that which ſupports.
Bereave me not thy aid,
Thy counſel, in this uttermoſt diſtreſs,
My only ſtrength and ſtay. Milton.

6. Power of mind; force of any mental faculty.
Ariſtotle's large views, acuteneſs and penetration of thought, and ſtrength of judgment, few have equalled. Locke.
He enjoyed the greateſt ſtrength of good ſenſe, and the moſt exquiſite taſte of politeneſs. Addiſon.
We, like friendly colours, found our hearts unite,
And each from each contract new ſtrength and light. Pope.

7. Spirit; animation.
Methinks I feel new ſtrength within me riſe,
Wings growing, and dominion given. Milton.
Adam and firſt matron Eve
Had ended now their oriſons, and found
Strength added from above, new hope to ſpring
Out of deſpair Milton.

8. Vigour of writing; nervous diction; force, oppoſed to loftneſs, in writing or painting.
Leave ſuch to tune their own dull rhymes, and know
What's roundly ſmooth, or languiſhingly flow;
And praiſe the eaſy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's ſtrength and Waller's ſweetneſs join. Pope.
Carracci's ſtrength, Coreggio's ſoftor line,
Paulo's free ſtroke, and Titian's warmth divine. Pope.

9. Potency of liquors.

10. Fortification; fortreſs.
The rudiments of talking ſhould not only be retarded by the guard of our heart, but fenced in by certain ſtrengths placed in the mouth. Ben Jonſon.
He thought
This inacceſſible high ſtrength to have ſeiz'd. Milt.
Betray'd in all his ſtrengths, the wood beſet:
All inſtruments, all arts, of ruin met. Denham.

11. Support; maintenance of power.
What they boded would be a miſchief to us, you are providing, ſhall be one of our principal ſtrengths. Spratt.

12. Legal force; validity; ſecurity.

13. Confidence imparted.
Certain ſervices were due from the ſoldier to his captain, and from the captain to the prince; and upon the ſtrength of ſuch tenures, in after times, the deſcendents of theſe people and their kings did ſubſiſt and make their wars. Davenant.
The allies, after a ſucceſsful ſummer, are too apt, upon the ſtrength of it, to neglect their preparations for the enſuing campaign. Addiſon.

14. Armament; force; power.
What is his ſtrength by land? Shakſpeare.
Nor was there any other ſtrength deſigned to attend about his highneſs than one regiment. Clarendon.

15. Perſuaſive prevalence; argumentative force.
This preſuppoſed, it may then ſtand very well with ſtrength and ſoundneſs of reaſon, thus to anſwer. Hooker.

To STRENGTH. v. a. To ſtrengthen. Not uſed.
Edward's happy order'd reign moſt fertile breeds
Plenty of mighty ſpirits, to ſtrength his ſtate. Daniel.

To STRE'NGTHEN. v. a. [from ſtrength.]

1. To make ſtrong.

2. To confirm; to eſtabliſh.
Authority is by nothing ſo much ſtrengthened and confirmed as by cuſtom; for no man eaſily diſtruſts the things which he and all men have been always bred up to. Temple.
Thee, bold Longinus! all the Nine inſpire,
And bleſs your critick with a poet's fire:
An ardent judge, who, zealous in his truſt,
With warmth gives ſentence, yet is always juſt;
Whoſe own example ſtrengthens all his laws,
And is himſelf that great ſublime he draws. Pope.
If it were true that women were thus naturally vain and light, then how much more blameable is that education, which ſeems contrived to ſtrengthen and increaſe this folly. Law.

3. To animate; to fix in reſolution.
Let us riſe up and build: ſo they ſtrengthened their hands for this work. Nehemiah.
Charge Joſhua, and encourage him, and ſtrengthen him. Deuteronomy.

4. To make to increaſe in power or ſecurity.
Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the reſt,
With powerful policy ſtrengthen themſelves, Shakſ.
They fought the ſtrengthening of the heathen.
2 Maccabees.

To STRE'NGTHEN. v. n. To grow ſtrong.
Oh meh for flatt'ry and deceit renown'd!
Thus when y' are young ye learn it all like him;
Till, as your years increaſe, that ſtrengthens too,
To undo poor maids. Otway.
The diſeaſe, that ſhall deſtroy at length,
Grows with his growth, and ſtrengthens with his ſtrength. Pope.

STRE'NGTHENER. } n. ſ. [from ſtrengthen, STRE'NGTHNER. } by contraction ſtrengthner.]

1. That which gives ſtrength; that which makes ſtrong.
Garlick is a great ſtrengthner of the ſtomach, upon decays of appetite, or indigeſtion. Temple.

2. [In medicine.] Strengtheners add to the bulk and firmneſs of the ſolids: cordials are ſuch as drive on the vital actions; but theſe ſuch as confirm the ſtamina. Quincy.

STRE'NGTHLESS. adj. [from ſtrength.]

1. Wanting ſtrength; deprived of ſtrength.
Yet are theſe feet, whoſe ſtrength leſs ſtay is numb,
Unable to ſupport this lump of clay. Shakſpeare.
As the wretch, whoſe fever-weakened joints,
Like ſtrengthleſs hinges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms Shakſpeare.

2. Wanting potency; weak. Uſed of liquors.
This liquor muſt be inflammable or not, and yet ſubtile and pungent, which may be called ſpirit; or elſe ſtrengthleſs or inſipid, which may be named phlegm. Boyle.

STRE'NUOUS. adj. [ſtrenuus, Latin.]

1. Brave; bold; active; valiant; dangerouſly laborious.
Nations grown corrupt
Love bondage more than liberty;
Bondage with eaſe than ſtrenuous liberty. Milton.

2. Zealous; vehement.
He reſolves to be ſtrenuous for taking off the teſt, againſt the maxims of all wiſe chriſtian governments, which always had ſome eſtabliſhed religion, leaving at beſt a toleration to others. Swift to Pope.
Citizens within the bills of mortality have been ſtrenuous againſt the church and crown. Swift.

STRE'NUOUSLY. adv. [from ſtrenuous.]

1. Vigorouſly; actively.
Many can uſe both hands, yet will there divers remain that can ſtrenuouſly make uſe of neither. Brown.

2. Zealouſly; vehemently; with ardour.

3. The timber againſt which the rower plants his feet.

This fiery ſpeech inflames his fearful friends;
They tug at ev'ry oar, and every ſtretcher bends. Dryden.

To STREW. v. a. [The orthography of this word is doubtful. It is ſometimes written ſtrew, and ſometimes ſtrow; I have taken both: Skinner propoſes ſtrow, and Junius writes ſtraw. Their reaſons will appear in the word from which it may be derived. Strawan, Gothick; ſtroyen, Dutch; ſtreapian, Saxon; ſtrauen, German; ſtröer, Daniſh. Perhaps ſtrow is beſt, being that which reconciles etymology with pronunciation. See STROW.]

1. To ſpread by being ſcattered.

The ſnow which does the top of Pindus ſtrew,
Did never whiter ſhew. Spenſer.

Is thine alone the ſeed that ſtrews the plain?
The birds of heav'n ſhall vindicate their grain. Pope.

2. To ſpread by ſcattering.

I thought thy bride-bed to have deck'd, ſweet maid!
And not have ſtrew'd thy grave. Shakſpeare.

Here be tears of perfect moan,
Wept for thee in Helicon;
And ſome flowers and ſome bays,
For thy herſe, to ſtrew the ways. Milton.

3. To ſcatter looſely.

The calf he burnt in the fire, ground it to powder, and ſtrawed it upon the water, and made Iſrael drink of it. Exodus.

With furies and nocturnal orgies fir'd,
Whom e'en the ſavage beaſts had ſpar'd, they kill'd,
And ſtrew'd his mangled limbs about the field. Dryden.

STRE'WMENT. n. ſ. [from ſtrew.] Any thing ſcattered in decoration.

Her death was doubtful—For charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles ſhould be thrown on her;
Yet here ſhe is allow'd her virgin chants,
Her maiden ſtrewments, and the bringing home
Of bell and burial. Shakſpeare.

STRIÆ. n. ſ. [Latin.] In natural hiſtory, the ſmall channels in the ſhells of cockles and ſcallops.

The ſalt, leiſurely permitted to ſhoot of itſelf in the liquor, expoſed to the open air, did ſhoot into more fair chryſtalline ſtriæ than thoſe that were gained out of the remaining part of the ſame liquor by a more haſty evaporation. Boyle.

STRI'ATE. } adj. [from ſtriæ, Lat. ſtrié,
STRI'ATED. } Fr.] Formed in ſtriæ.

Theſe effluviums fly by ſtriated atoms and winding particles, as Des Cartes conceiveth, or glide by ſtreams attracted from either pole unto the equator. Brown.

Des Cartes imagines this earth once to have been a ſun, and ſo the centre of a leſſer vortex, whoſe axis ſtill kept the ſame poſture, by reaſon of the ſtriate particles finding no fit pores for their paſſages, but only in this direction. Ray.

Cryſtal, when [illegible] with the [illegible], ſhews, if broke, a ſtriated or [illegible] texture, like thoſe talcs. Woodward.

STRI'ATURE. n. ſ. [from ſtriæ; ſtrieur, Fr.] Diſpoſition of ſtriæ.

STRICT. adj. [ſtrictus, Latin.]

1. Exact; accurate; rigorouſly nice.

Thou'lt fall into deception unaware,
Not keeping ſtricteſt watch. Milton.

As legions in the field their front diſplay,
To try the fortune of ſome doubtful day,
And move to meet their foes with ſober pace,
Strict to their figure, though in wider ſpace. Dryd.

He checks the bold deſign;
And rules as ſtrict his labour'd works confine,
As if the Stagyrite o'erlook'd each line. Pope.

2. Severe; rigorous; not mild; not indulgent.

Implore her, in my voice, that ſhe make friends
To the ſtrict deputy. Shakſpeare.

Thy will
By nature free, not over-rul'd by fate
Inextricable, or ſtrict neceſſity. Milton.

If a ſtrict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable; and if, as they grow up, the rigour be, as they deſerve it, gently relaxed, former reſtraints will increaſe their love. Locke.

Numa the rites of ſtrict religion knew;
On ev'ry altar laid the incenſe due. Prior.

3. Confined; not extenſive.

As they took the compaſs of their commiſſion ſtricter or larger, ſo their dealings were more or leſs moderate. Hooker.

STROKE. n. ſ. [from ſtrook, the preterit of ſtrike.]
1. A blow; a knock; a ſudden act of one body upon another.
The oars were ſilver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept ſtroke, and made
The water which they beat to follow faſter,
As amorous of their ſtrokes. Shakſpeare.
His white man'd ſteeds, that bow'd beneath the yoke,
He cheer'd to courage with a gentle ſtroke;
Then urg'd his fiery chariot on the foe,
And riding ſhook his lance in act to throw. Dryd.

2. A hoſtile blow.
As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled ſtrokes upon the foe. Shakſpeare.
He entered, and won the whole kingdom of Naples, without ſtriking a ſtroke. Bacon.
Both were of ſhining ſteel, and wrought ſo pure,
As might the ſtrokes of two ſuch arms endure. Dryden.
I had a long deſign upon [he ears of Curl; but the rogue would never allow me a fair ſtroke at them, though my penknife was ready. Swift.

3. A ſudden diſeaſe or affliction.
Take this purſe, thou whom the heav'ns plagues
Have humbled to all ſtrokes. Shakſpeare.
At this one ſtroke the man look'd dead in law;
His flatterers ſcamper, and his friends withdraw. Harte.

4. The ſound of the clock.
What is 't o'clock?
—Upon the ſtroke of four. Shakſpeare.

1. To raife by the force of chymical fire.

2. To exalt; to heighten; to elevate.

And as his actions rofe, fo raife they ftill their vein
In words, whofe weight beft fuits a fublimated ftrain. Drayton.

Not only the grofs and illiterate fouls, but the moft aërial and fublimated, are rather the more proper fuel for an immaterial fire. Decay of Piety.

The precepts of chriftianity are fo excellent and refined, and fo apt to cleanfe and fublimate the more grofs and corrupt, as fhews flefh and blood never revealed it. Decay of Piety.

SU'BLIMATE. n. f. [from fublime.]

1. Any thing raifed by fire in the retort.

Enquire the manner of fubliming, and what metals endure fubliming, and what body the fublimate makes. Bacon.

2. Quickfilver raifed in the retort.

SU'BLIMATE. adj. Raifed by fire in the veffel.

The particles of mercury, uniting with the acid particles of fpirit of falt, compofe mercury fublimate; and, with the particles of fulphur, cinnabar. Newton.

SUBLIMA'TION. n. f. [fublimation, Fr. from fublimate.]

1. A chymical operation which raifes bodies in the veffel by the force of fire.

Sublimation differs very little from diftillation, excepting that in diftillation only the fluid parts of bodies are raifed, but in this the folid and dry; and that the matter to be diftilled may be either folid or fluid, but fublimation is only concerned about folid fubftances. There is alfo another difference, namely, that rarefaction, which is of very great ufe in diftillation, has hardly any room in fublimation; for the fubftances which are to be fublimed, being folid, are incapable of rarefaction; and fo it is only impulfe that can raife them. Quincy.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the fettlement of liquors, by heat, by precipitation, or fublimation; that is, a calling of the feveral parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

Since oil of fulphur per campanum is of the fame nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be inferred that fulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts, fo ftrongly cohering by attraction, as to afcend together by fublimation? Newton.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.

She turns
Bodies to fpirits, by fublimation ftrange. Davies.

Shall he pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and fhort in moral, which are but the rudiments and firft draught of religion, as religion is the perfection, refinement, and fublimation of morality? South.

SUBLI'ME. adj. [sublimis, Latin.]

1. High in place; exalted aloft.

They sum'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime

Their hearts were jocund and sublime,
Drunk with idolatry, drunk with wine. Milton.

5. Lofty of mien; elevated in manner.

He was sublime, and almost tumorous, in his looks and gestures. Wotton.

His fair large front and eye sublime declar'd
Absolute rule. Milton.

SUBLI'ME. n. s. The grand or lofty style. The sublime is a gallicism, but now naturalized.

Longinus strengthens all his laws,
And is himself the great sublime he draws. Pope.

The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase; the perfect sublime arises from all three together. Addison.

To SUBLI'ME. v. a. [sublimer, French: from the adjective.]

1. To raise by a chymical fire.

Study our manuscripts, those myriads
Of letters, which have past 'twixt thee and me;
Thence write our annals, and in them lessons be
To all, whom love's subliming fire invades. Donne.

2. To raise on high.

Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong,
Nor can thy head, not help'd, itself sublime,
Yet, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb. Denham.

3. To exalt; to heighten; to improve.

Flow'rs, and then fruit,
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd,
To vital spirits aspire. Milton.

The fancies of most are moved by the inward springs of the corporeal machine, which, even in the most sublimed intellectuals, is dangerously influential. Glanville.

Art, being strengthened by the knowledge of things, may pass into nature by slow degrees, and so be sublimed into a pure genius, which is capable of distinguishing betwixt the beauties of nature, and that which is low in her. Dryden.

Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine;
Who not alone the southern vines sublimes,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes. Pope.

To SUBLI'ME. v. n. To rise in the chymical vessel by the force of fire.

The particles of sal ammoniack in sublimation carry up the particles of antimony, which will not sublime alone. Newton.

This salt is fixed in a gentle fire, and sublimes in a great one. Arbuthnot.

In English lays, and all sublimely great,
Thy Homer charms with all his ancient heat. Parnell.

Fustian's so sublimely bad;
It is not poetry, but prose run mad. Pope.

SUBLI'MINESS. n. s. [sublimitas, Lat.] The same as sublimity.

SUBLI'MITY. n. s. [from sublime; sublimité, French; sublimitas, Latin.]

1. Height of place; local elevation.

2. Height of nature; excellence.

As religion looketh upon him who in majesty and power is infinite, as we ought we account not of it, unless we esteem it even according to that very height of excellency which our hearts conceive, when divine sublimity itself is rightly considered. Hooker.

In respect of God's incomprehensible sublimity and purity, this is also true, that God is neither a mind nor a spirit like other spirits, nor a light such as can be discerned. Raleigh.

3. Loftiness of style or sentiment.

Milton's distinguishing excellence lies in the sublimity of his thoughts, in the greatness of which he triumphs over all the poets, modern and ancient, Homer only excepted. Addison.

SUBLI'NGUAL. adj. [sublingual, French; sub and lingua, Latin.] Placed under the tongue.

Those subliming humours should be intercepted, before they mount to the head, by sublingual pills. Harvey.

SUBLU'NAR. } adj. [sublunaire, French;
SU'BLUNARY. } sub and luna, Latin.] Situate beneath the moon; earthly; terrestrial; of this world.

Dull sublunary lovers! love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

Night measur'd, with her shadowy cone,
Half way up hill this vast sublunar vault. Milton.

Through seas of knowledge we our course advance,
Discov'ring still new worlds of ignorance;
And these discov'ries make us all confess
That sublunary science is but guess. Denham.

The celestial bodies above the moon, being not subject to chance, remain in perpetual order, while all things sublunary are subject to change. Dryden.

Ovid had warn'd her to beware
Of strolling gods, whose usual trade is,
Under pretence of taking air,
To pick up sublunary ladies. Swift.

The fair philosopher to Rowley flies,
Where in a box the whole creation lies;
She sees the planets in their turns advance,
And scorns, Poitier, this sublunary dance. Young.

SU'BMARINE. adj. [sub and mare, Lat.] Lying or acting under the sea.

This contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds and tides for motion, and the sight of the heavens for direction. Wilkins.

Not only the herbaceous and woody submarine plants, but also the lithophyta affect this manner of growing, as I observed in corals. Ray.

To SUBME'RGE. v. a. [submerger, Fr. submergo, Latin.] To drown; to put under water.

So half my Egypt was submerg'd, and made
A cistern for scal'd snakes. Shakespeare.

SUBME'RSION. n. s. [submersion, French; from submersus, Latin.] The act of drowning; state of being drowned.

The great Atlantick island is mentioned in Plato's Timæus, almost contiguous to the western parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly swallowed up by that ocean; which, if true, might afford a passage from Africa to America by land before that submersion. Hale.

To SUBMI'NISTER. } v. a. [subministro,
To SUBMI'NISTRATE. } Lat.] To supply; to afford. Not much in use.

Some things have been discovered, not only by the industry of mankind, but even the inferior animals have subministered unto man the invention of many things, natural, artificial, and medicinal. Hale.

Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pestilent seminaries, than steams of nasty folks. Harvey.

To SUBMI'NISTER. v. n. To subserve; to be useful to.

Passions, as fire and water, are good servants, but bad masters, and subminister to the best and worst purposes. L'Estrange.

SUBMI'SS. adj. [from submissus, Latin.] Humble; submissive; obsequious.

King James, mollified by the bishop's submiss and eloquent letters, wrote back, that though he were in part moved by his letters, yet he should not be fully satisfied except he spake with him. Bacon.

Nearer his presence, Adam, though not aw'd,
Yet with submiss approach, and reverence meek,
As to a superior nature, bowed low. Milton.

Rejoicing, but with awe,
In adoration at his feet I fell
Submiss: he rear'd me. Milton.

SUBMI'SSION. n. s. [soumission, French; submissus, Latin.]

1. Delivery of himself to the power of another.

Submission, dauphin! 'tis a mere French word,
We English warriors wot not what it means. Shakespeare.

2. Acknowledgment of inferiority or dependance; humble or suppliant behaviour.

In all submission and humility
York doth present himself unto your highness. Shakespeare.

Great prince, by that submission you'll gain more
Than e'er your haughty courage won before. Halifax.

3. Acknowledgment of a fault; confession of errour.

Be not as extreme in submission, as in offence. Shakespeare.

4. Obsequiousness; resignation; obedience.

No duty in religion is more justly required by God Almighty, than a perfect submission to his will in all things. Temple.

SUBMI'SSIVE. adj. [submissus, Latin.] Humble; testifying submission or inferiority.

On what submissive message art thou sent? Shakespeare.

Her at his feet submissive in distress
He thus with peaceful words uprais'd. Milton.

Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I hasted down,
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

SUBMI'SSIVELY. adv. [from submissive.] Humbly; with confession of inferiority.

The goddess,
Soft in her tone, submissively replies. Dryden.

But speech ev'n there submissively withdraws
From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause:
Then pompous silence reigns, and stills the noisy laws. Dryden.

SUBMI'SSIVENESS. n. s. [from submissive.] Humility; confession of fault or inferiority.

If thou sin in wine and wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory.
Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness;
But he that boasts shuts that out of his story:
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy
With his poor clod of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

SUBMI'SSLY. adv. [from submiss.] Humbly; with submission.

Humility consists, not in wearing mean clothes, and going loftily and submissly, but in mean opinion of thyself. Taylor.

To SUBMI'T. v. a. [soumettre, French; submitto, Latin.]

1. To let down; to sink.

Sometimes the hill submits itself awhile
In small descents, which do its height beguile;
And sometimes mounts, but so as billows play,
Whose rise not hinders but makes short our way. Dryden.

Neptune stood,
With all his hosts of waters at command,
Beneath them to submit th' officious flood,
And with his trident shov'd them off the sand. Dryden.

2. To subject; to resign without resistance to authority.

Bring it thy mistress, and submit thyself under her hands. Genesis.

Christian people submit themselves to conformable obeisance of the lawful and religious constitutions of their spiritual rulers. White.

Will ye submit your neck, and chuse to bend the supple knee? Milton.

To leave to discretion; to refer to judgment.

Whether the condition of the clergy be able to bear a heavy burden, is submitted to the house. Swift

To SUBMIT. v. n. To be subject; to acquiesce in the authority of another; to yield.

To thy husband's will
Thine shall submit: he over thee shall rule. Milton.

Our religion requires from us, not only to forego pleasure, but to submit to pain, disgrace, and even death. Rogers.

SUBMU'LTIPLE. n. f. A submultiple number or quantity is that which is contained in another number, a certain number of times exactly: thus 3 is submultiple of 21, as being contained in it seven times exactly. Harris.

SUBO'CTAVE. } adj. [sub and octavus,
SUBO'CTUPLE. } Latin; and octuple.]
Containing one part of eight.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness of the weight, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion; so two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple, four a suboctuple. Wilkins.

Had they erected the cube of a foot for their principal concave, and geometrically taken its solecture, the congius, from the cube of half a foot, they would have divided the congius into eight parts, each of which would have been regularly the cube of a quarter foot, their well-known palm; this is the course taken for our gallon, which has the quarter its suboctave. Arbuthnot.

SUBO'RDINACY. } n. f. [from subordi-
SUBO'RDINANCY. } nate. Subordinacy is the proper and analogical word.]

1. The state of being subject.

Pursuing the imagination through all its extravagances, is no improper method of correcting, and bringing it to act in subordinacy to reason. Spectator.

2. Series of subordination.

The subordinacy of the government changing hands so often, makes an unfriendliness in the pursuit of the publick interests. Temple.

SUBORDINATE. adj. [sub and ordinatus, Latin.]

1. Inferiour in order, in nature, in dignity or power.

It was subordinate, not enslaved, to the understanding, not as a servant to a master, but as a queen to her king, who acknowledges a subjection, yet retains a majesty. South.

Whether dark prefages of the night proceed from any latent power of the foul during her abstraction, or from any operation of subordinate spirits, has been a dispute. Addison.

2. Descending in regular series.

The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, rather counters than martial men, yet assisted with subordinate commanders of great experience. Bacon.

His next subordinate
Awak'ning, thus to him in secret spake Milton.

These carry such plain characters of disagreement or affinity, that the several kinds and subordinate species of each are easily distinguished. Woodward.

To SUBO'RDINATE. v. a. [sub and ordino, Lat.] To range under another. Not in use, but proper and elegant.

If I have subordinated picture and sculpture to architecture, as their mistress, so there are other inferior arts subordinate to them. Wotton.

SUBO'RDINATELY. adv. [from subordinate.] In a series regularly descending.

It being the highest step of all, to which all others subordinately tend, one would think it could be capable of no improvement. Decay of Piety.

SUBORDINA'TION. n. f. [subordination, Fr. from subordinate.]

1. The state of being inferiour to another.

Nor can a council rational decide,
But with subordination to her guide. Dryden.

2. A series regularly descending.

The natural creatures having a local subordination, the rational having a political, and sometimes a sacred. Holiday.

3. Place of rank.

If we would suppose a ministry where every single person was of distinguished piety, and all great officers of state and law diligent in chusing persons who in their several subordinations would be obliged to follow the examples of their superiors, the empire of irreligion would be soon destroyed. Swift

To SUBORN. v. a. [suborner, Fr. suborno, Latin.]

1. To procure privately; to procure by secret collusion.

His judges were the self-same men by whom his accusers were suborned. Hooker.

Fond wretch! thou know'st not what thou speak'st,
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour
In hateful practice. Shakspeare.

Reason may meet
Some specious object, by the foe suborn'd,
And fall into deception. Milton.

His artful bosom heaves dissembled sighs,
And tears suborn'd fall dropping from his eyes. Prior.

2. To procure by indirect means.

Behold
Those who by sing'ring sickness lose their breath,
And those who by despair suborn their death. Dryden.

SUBORNA'TION. n. f. [subornation, Fr. from suborn.] The crime of procuring any to do a bad action.

Thomas earl of Desmond was through false subornation of the queen of Edward IV. brought to his death at Tredah most unjustly. Spenser.

You set the crown
Upon the head of this forgetful man,
And for his sake wear the detested blot
Of murd'rous subornation. Shakspeare.

The fear of punishment in this life will preserve men from few vices, since some of the blackest often prove the surest steps to favour; such as ingratitude, hypocrisy, treachery, and subornation. Swift.

SUBO'RNER. n. f. [suborneur, Fr. from suborn.] One that procures a bad action to be done.

SUBPOE'NA. n. f. [sub and pœna, Lat.] A writ commanding attendance in a court, under a penalty.

SUBQUADRU'PLE. adj. [sub and quadruple.] Containing one part of four.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath in itself, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, to two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion. Wilkins.

SUBQUINTU'PLE. adj. [sub and quintuple.] Containing one part of five.

If unto the lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subquintuple proportion. Wilkins.

SUBRE'CTOR. n. f. [sub and rector.] The rector's vicegerent.

He was chosen subrector of the college. Walton.

To SUBSCRIBE. v. a. [souscrire, Fr. subscribo, Latin.]

1. To give consent to, by underwriting the name.

They united by subscribing a covenant, which they pretended to be the same that had been subscribed in the reign of King James, and that his majesty himself had subscribed it, by which imposition people of all degrees engaged themselves in it. Clarendon.

The reader sees the names of those persons by whom this letter is subscribed. Addison.

2. To attest by writing the name.

Their particular testimony ought to be better examined, than if one other subscribed with an hundred hands. Whitgift.

3. To submit. Not used.

The king gone to-night! subscribed his pow'r!
Confin'd to exhalation! all is gone. Shakspeare.

To SUBSCRI'BE. v. n.

1. To give consent.

Ossius, with whole hand
And we will all subscribe to thy advice. Shakspeare.

It wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key,
All cruelty I will subscribe. Shakspeare.

So spoke much humbled Eve; but fate
Subscribe not: nature first gave signs, impress'd
On land, beast, air. Milton.

2. To promise a stipulated sum for the promotion of any undertaking.

SUBSCRI'BER. n. f. [from subscriptio, Lat.]

1. One who subscribes.

2. One who contributes to any undertaking.

Let a pamphlet come out upon a demand in a proper juncture, every one of the party who can spare a shilling shall be a subscriber. Swift.

SUBSCRI'PTION. n. f. [from subscriptio, Latin.]

1. Any thing underwritten.

The man asked, Are ye christians? We answered we were; fearing the less because of the cross we had seen in the subscription. Bacon.

2. Consent or attestation given by underwriting the name.

3. The act or state of contributing to any undertaking.

The work he plied;
Stocks and subscriptions pour on every side. Pope.
South-sea subscriptions take who please,
I have my lottery. Pope.

4. Submission; obedience. Not in use.

I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children;
You owe me no subscription. Shakspeare.

SUBSE'CTION. n. f. [sub and sectio, Lat.] A subdivision of a larger section into a letter; a section of a section. Dict.

SUBSE'QUENTIVE. adj. [from subsequor, Lat.] Following in train.

SUBSEPTU'PLE. adj. [sub and septuplus, Lat.] Containing one of seven parts.

If unto the lower pully there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subquintuple proportion; if a third, a subseptuple. Wilkins.

SUBSEQUENCE. n. f. [from subsequor, Lat.] The state of following; not precedence.

By this tacitly ascertain notice of the order of precedence and subsequence in which they did pass. Gibbon.

SUBSEQUENT. adj. [Subsequent. Fr. subsequens, Lat. This word is improperly pronounced long in the second syllable by Shakspeare.] Following in train; not preceding.

To such indeed, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come, at large. Shakspeare.

The subsequent words come on before the precedent vanish. Bacon.

Why does each consenting sign
With prudent harmony combine
In turns to move, and subsequent appear
To gird the globe and regulate the year? Prior.

This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster, made about 1648, when England was in the utmost confusion. Swift.

SU'BSEQUENTLY. adv. [from subsequent.] Not so as to go before; so as to follow in train.

To men in governing most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends; but they are forced to comply subsequently, and so strike in with things as they fall out, by pertinacious after-applications of them to their purposes. South.

To SUBSE'RVE. v. a. [subservio, Lat.] To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule,
But to subserve where wisdom bears command.
Milton.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.

The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers. Watts.

SUBSE'RVIENCE. } n. f. [from subserve.]
SUBSE'RVIENCY. } Instrumental fitness, use, or operation.

Wicked spirits may by their cunning carry farther in a seeming confederacy or subserviency to the designs of a good angel. Dryden.

There is an immediate and agil subservience of the spirits to the empire of the soul. Hale.

We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much fitness, use, and subserviency to infinite functions, any otherwise than as the effect of contrivance. Bentley.

There is a regular subordination and subserviency among all the parts to beneficial ends. Cheyne.

SUBSE'RVIENT. adj. [subserviens, Lat.] Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Hammond had an incredible dexterity, scarce ever reading any thing which he did not make subservient in one kind or other. Fell.

Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things were referred; but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods. Stilling fleet.

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them serviceable to man. Ray.

While awake, we feel none of those motions continually made on the disposal of the corporeal principle subservient herein. Grew.

Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect. Grew.

We are not to consider the world as the body of God; he is an uniform being, void of organs, members, or parts; and they are his creatures, subordinate to him, and subservient to his will. Newton.

Most critics, fond of some subservient art,
Still make the whole depend upon a part;
They talk of principles, but notions prize,
And all to one lov'd folly sacrifice. Pope.

SUBSE'XTUPLE. adj. [sub and sextuplus, Lat.] Containing one part of six.

One of these under pullies abates half of that heaviness the weight hath, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, two of them a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple. Wilkins.

To SUBSI'DE. v. n. [subsido, Lat.] To sink; to tend downward. It is commonly used of one part of a compound, sinking in the whole. Pope has used it rather improperly.

He shook the sacred honours of his head,
With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill'd.
Dryden.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weighs the men's wits against the lady's hair:
The doubtful beam long nods from side to side;
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside.
Pope.

SUBSI'DENCE. } n. f. [from subside.] The SUBSI'DENCY. } act of sinking; tendency downward.

This gradual subsidency of the abyss would take up a considerable time. Burnet.

This mistellany of bodies being determined to subsidence merely by their different specifick gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time. Woodward.

By the alternate motion of those air bladders, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a sudden subsidence meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquor is still farther attenuated. Arbuthnot.

SUBSI'DIARY. adj. [subsidiaire, Fr. subsidiarius, Lat. from subsidy.] Assistant; brought in aid.

Firm we subsist, but possible to swerve. Milton.

The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republick could subsist any longer. Swift.

3. To have means of living; to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate; and gave me wherewithal to subsist in the long winter which succeeded. Dryden.

Let us remember those that want necessaries, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembered, had it been our sad lot to subsist on other men's charity. Atterbury.

4. To inhere; to have existence by means of something else.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the discernment is not so easy. South.

SUBSI'STENCE or SUBSI'STENCY. n. f. [subsistence, Fr. from subsist.]

1. Real being.

The flesh, and the conjunction of the flesh with God, began both at one instant; his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act: so that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one, and that from everlasting. Hooker.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, that is, the chain of these differing subsistences that compound us, as how it first commenced. Glanville.

Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were of some creatures existing. Stillingfleet.

2. Competence; means of supporting life.

His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plunder of his province. Addison.

3. Inherence in something else.

SUBSI'STENT. adj. [subsistens, Lat.]

Such as deny spirits subsistent without bodies will with difficulty affirm the separate existence of their own. Brown.

2. Inherent.

These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Beattie.

SUBSTANCE. n. f. [substance, Fr. substantia, Latin.]

1. Being; something existing; something of which we can say that it is.

Since then the soul works by herself alone,
Springs not from sense, nor humours well agree:
Her nature is peculiar, and her own;
She is a substance, and a perfect being. Dryden.

The strength of gods,
And this empyreal substance, cannot fail. Milton.

2. That which supports accidents.

What creatures there inhabit, of what mold
And substance? Milton.

Every being is considered as subsisting in and by itself, and then it is called a substance, or it is considered as existing in and by another, and then it is called a mode or manner of being. Watts.

3. The essential part.

It will serve our turn to comprehend the substance without confining ourselves to scrupulous exactness in form. Digby.

This edition is the same in substance with the Latin. Burnet.

They are the best epitomes, and let you see with one cast of the eye the substance of a hundred pages. Addison.

4. Something real, not imaginary; something solid, not empty.

Shadows to-night
Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,
Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers
Arm'd in proof, and led by shallow Richmond.
Shakspeare.

He the future evil shall no less
In apprehension than in substance feel. Milton.

Heroick virtue did his actions guide,
And he the substance, not th' appearance, chose:
To refine one such friend he took more pride,
Than to destroy whole thousands of such foes.
Dryden.

God is no longer to be worshipped and believed in as a god foreshowing and alluring by types, but as a god who has performed the substance of what he promised. Norris.

5. Body; corporeal nature.

Between the parts of opake and coloured bodies are many spaces, either empty or replenished with mediums of other densities, as, water between the tinging corpuscles wherewith any liquor is impregnated, air between the aqueous globules that constitute clouds or mists, and for the most part space void of both air and water; but yet perhaps not wholly void of all substance between the parts of hard bodies. Newton.

The qualities of plants are more various than those of animal substances. Arbuthnot.

There may be a great and constant cough, with an extraordinary discharge or flegmatick matter, a while, notwithstanding, the substance of the lungs remains sound. Blackmore.

6. Wealth; means of life.

He hath eaten me out of house and home, and hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his: but I will have some of it out again. Shakspeare.

We are destroying many thousand lives, and exhausting our substance, but not for our own interest. Swift.

SUBSTA'NTIAL. adj. [substantiel, Fr. from substance.]

1. Real; actually existing.

If this atheist would have his chance to be a real and substantial agent, he is more stupid than the vulgar. Bentley.

2. True; solid; real; not merely seeming.

O blessed, blessed night! I am afraid,
Being in night, all this is but a dream;
Too flattering sweet to be substantial. Shakspeare.

To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life. Milton.

If happiness be a substantial good,
Not fram'd of accidents, nor subject to them,
I err'd to seek it in a blind revenge. Denham.

Time, as a river, hath brought down to us what is more light and superficial, while things more solid and substantial have been immersed. Glanville.

The difference betwixt the empty vanity of ostentation, and the substantial ornaments of virtue. L'Estrange.

Observations are the only sure grounds whereon to build a lasting and substantial philosophy. Woodw.

A solid and substantial greatness of soul, looks down with neglect on the censures and applauses of the multitude. Addison.

This useful, charitable, humble employment of yourselves, is what I recommend to you with greatest earnestness, as being a substantial part of a wise and pious life. Law.

3. Corporeal; material.

Now shine these planets with substantial rays?
Does innate lustre gild their measur'd days? Prior.

The sun appears flat like a plate of silver, the moon as big as the sun, and the rainbow a large substantial arch in the sky; all which are gross falsehoods. Watts.

4. Strong; stout; bulky.

Substantial doors,
Cross-barr'd and bolted fast, fear no assault. Milt.

5. Responsible; moderately wealthy; possessed of substance.

Trial of crimes and titles of right shall be made by verdict of a jury, chosen out of the honest and most substantial freeholders. Spenser.

Most wretched man,
That to affections does the bridle lend;
In their beginning they are weak and wan,
But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end
Spenser.

Some villains of my court
Are in content and sufferance in this. Shakspeare.

Both gloried to have 'scap'd the tyrant Rome
As gods, and by their own recover'd strength,
Not by the sufferance of supernal pow'r. Milton.

SU'FFERER. n. s. [from suffer.]

1. One who endures or undergoes pain or inconvenience.

This evil on the Philistines is fall'n,
The sufferers then will scarce molest us here
From other hands we need not much to fear
Milton.

He, when his love was bounded in a few,
That were unhappy that they might be true,
Made you the fav'rite of his last sad times,
That is, a suff'rer in his subjects crimes. Dryden.

She returns to me with joy in her face, not for the sight of her husband, but from the good luck she has had at cards; and if she has been a loser, I am doubly a sufferer by it: she comes home out of humour, because she has been throwing away my estate. Addison.

The history of civil wars and rebellions does not make such deep and lasting impressions, as even of the same nature in which we or our friends have been sufferers. Addison.

Often these unhappy sufferers expire for want of sufficient vigour and spirit to carry on the animal regimen. Blackmore.

2. One who allows; one who permits.

Fit to be trusted on a bare suppose
That he is honest. Dryden.

SUPPO'SER. n. s. [from suppose.] One that supposes.

Thou hast by marriage made thy daughter mine,
While counterfeit supposers bleer'd thine eyne. Shakspeare.

SUPPOSI'TION. n. s. [suppositio, Fr. from suppose.] Position laid down; hypothesis; imagination yet unproved.

In saying he is a good man, understand me that he is sufficient; yet his means are in supposition. Shakspeare.

Sing, syren, for thyself, and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lye;
And in that glorious supposition think
He gains by death, that hath such means to die. Shakspeare.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

Such an original irresistible notion is neither requisite upon supposition of a deity, nor is it pretended to by religion. Bentley.

SUPPOSITI'TIOUS. adj. [from suppositus, supposititius, Latin.]

1. Not genuine; put by a trick into the place or character belonging to another.

The destruction of Mustapha was so fatal to Solyman's line, as the succession of the Turks from Solyman is suspected to be of strange blood; for that Selymus II. was thought to be supposititious. Bacon.

It is their opinion, that no man ever killed his father; but that, if it should ever happen, the reputed son must have been illegitimate, suppositious, or begotten in adultery. Addison.

There is a Latin treatise among the supposititious pieces, ascribed to Athanasius. Waterland.

2. Supposed; imaginary; not real.

Some alterations in the globe send rather to the benefit of the earth, and its productions, than their destruction, as all these supposititious ones manifestly would do. Woodward.

SUPPOSITI'TIOUSNESS. n. s. [from supposititious.] State of being counterfeit.

SUPPO'SITIVELY. adv. [from suppose.] Upon supposition.

The unreformed sinner may have some hope suppositively, if he do change and repent: the honest penitent may hope positively. Hammond.

To deny him this supremacy is to dethrone the Deity, and give his kingdom to another. Rogers.

SUPRE'ME. adj. [supremus, Lat.]

1. Highest in dignity; highest in authority. It may be observed that superiour is used often of local elevation, but supreme only of intellectual or political.

As no man serveth God, and loveth him not; so neither can any man sincerely love God, and not extremely abhor that sin which is the highest degree of treason against the supreme Guide and Monarch of the whole world, with whose divine authority and power it investeth others. Hooker.

The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform
Thy thoughts with nobleness! Shakspeare.

My soul akes
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both. Shakspeare.

His strength, the seat of Deity supreme.
Milton.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees;
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays.
Dryden.

2. Highest; most excellent.

No single virtue we can most commend,
Whether the wife, the mother, or the friend,
For she was all in that supreme degree,
That, as no one prevail'd, so all was she. Dryden.

To him both heav'n
The right had giv'n,
And his own love bequeath'd supreme command.
Dryden.

The swan is a large water-fowl, that has a long neck, and is very white, excepting when it is young. Its legs and feet are black, as is its bill, which is like that of a goose, but something rounder, and a little hooked at the lower end of it. the two sides below its eyes are black and shining like ebony. Swans use wings like sails, which catch the wind, so that they are driven along in the water. They feed upon herbs and some sort of grain like a goose, and some are said to have lived three hundred years. There is a species of swans with the feathers of their heads, towards the breast, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by Moses among the unclean creatures; but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of musick, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was near expiring; a tradition generally received, but fabulous. Calmet.

With unfeinted eye
Compare her face with ſome that I ſhall ſhow,
And I will make thee think thy ſwan a crow.
Shakſpeare.

Let muſick ſound, while he doth make his choice;

And teach the neighb'ring echoes how to swear. Young.

To SWEAR. v. a.

1. To put to an oath; to bind by an oath administered.

Moses took the bones of Joseph; for he had straitly sworn the children of Israel. Exodus

Swom ashore, man, like a duck, I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn. Shakspeare.

Let me swear you all to secrecy,
And, to conceal my shame, conceal my life. Dryd

2. To declare upon oath: as, he swore treason against his friend.

3. To obtest by an oath.

Now, by Apollo, king, thou swear'st thy gods in vain.
——O vassal! miscreant! Shakspeare.

SWE'ARER. n. s. [from swear.] A wretch who obtests the great name wantonly and profanely.

And must they all be hang'd that swear and lie?
——Every one.
——Who must hang them?
——Why, the honest men.
——Then the liars and swearers are fools; for there are liars and swearers enow to beat the honest men, and hang them up. Shakspeare.

Take not his name, who made thy mouth, in vain:
It gets thee nothing, and hath no excuse;
Lust and wine plead a pleasure, avarice a gain,
But the cheap swearer through his open sluice
Lets his soul run for naught. Herbert

Of all men a philosopher should be no swearer, for an oath, which is the end of controversies in law, cannot determine any here, where reason only must induce. Brown

It is the opinion of our most refined swearers, that the same oath or curse cannot, consistently with true politeness, be repeated above nine times in the same company by the same person Swift.

SWEAT. n. s. [ꞅpæꞇ, Saxon; sweet, Dutch.]

1. The matter evacuated at the pores by heat or labour.

Sweat is salt in taste; for that part of the nourishment which is fresh and sweet, turneth into blood and flesh; and the sweat is that part which is excerned. Bacon

Some insensible effluvium, exhaling out of the stone, comes to be checked and condensed by the air on the superficies of it, as it happens to sweat on the skins of animals. Boyle.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid
In balmy sweat. Milton.

When Lucilius brandishes his pen,
And flashes in the face of guilty men,
A cold sweat stands in drops on ev'ry part,
And rage succeeds to tears, revenge to smart. Dryden.

Sweat is produced by changing the balance between the fluids and solids, in which health consists, so as that projectile motion of the fluids overcome the resistance of the solids. Arbuthnot.

2. Labour; toil; drudgery.

This painful labour of abridging was not easy, but a matter of sweat and watching. 2 Maccabees.

The field
To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd. Milton.

What from Jonson's oil and sweat did flow,
Or what more easy nature did bestow
On Shakespeare's gentler muse, in thee full grown
Their graces both appear. Denham.

3. Evaporation of moisture.

Beans give in the mow, and therefore those that are to be kept are not to be thrashed till March, that they have had a thorough sweat in the mow. Mortimer.

To SWEAT. v. n. preterit swet, sweated; part. pass. sweaten. [from the noun.]

1. To be moist on the body with heat or labour.

Let them be free, marry them to your heirs,
Why sweat they under burthens? Shakspeare.

Mistress Page at the door, sweating and blowing, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you. Shakspeare.

When he was brought again to the bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely Shaksp.

About this time in Autumn, there reigned in the city and other parts of the kingdom a disease then new, which, of the accidents and manner thereof, they called the sweating sickness. Bacon.

A young tall squire
Did from the camp at first before him go;
At first he did, but scarce could follow strait,
Sweating beneath a shield's unruly weight. Cowley.

2. To toil; to labour; to drudge.

How the drudging goblin swet
To earn his cream bowl duly set;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn. Milton.

Our author, not content to see
That others write as carelessly as he;
Though he pretends not to make things complete,
Yet, to please you, he'd have the poets sweat. Waller.

3. To emit moisture.

Wainscots will sweat so that they run with water. Bacon.

In cold evenings there will be a moisture or sweating upon the stool. Mortimer.

The blustering winds furning for victory swept the snow from off the tops of those high mountains, and cast it down unto the plains in such abundance, that the Turks lay as men buried alive. Knolles.
Flying bullets now
To execute his rage appear too slow;
They miss or sweep but common souls away;
For such a loss Opdam his life must pay. Waller.
My looking is the fire of pestilence,
That sweeps at once the people and the prince. Dryden.
I have already swept the stakes, and with the common good fortune that prosperous gamesters can be content to sit. Dryden.
Is this the man who drives me before him
To the world's ridge, and sweeps me off like rubbish? Dryden.
Fool! time no change of motion knows;
With equal speed the torrent flows
To sweep fame, power, and wealth away:
The past is all by death possest,
And frugal fate that guards the rest,
By giving, bids them live, to-day. Fenton.
A duke holding in a great many hands, drew a huge heap of gold; but never observed a sharper, who under his arm swept a great deal of it into his hat. Swift.

5. To pass over with celerity and force.

6. To rub over.

Their long descending train
With rubies edg'd and sapphires, swept the plain. Dryden.

7. To strike with a long stroke.

Descend, ye nine; descend, and sing;
The breathing instruments inspire,
Wake into voice each silent string,
And sweep the sounding lyre. Pope.

To SWEEP, v. n.

1. To pass with violence, tumult, or swiftness. Perhaps in the first quotation we should read swoop.

Haste me to know it, that I with wings as swift
As meditation or the thoughts of love
May sweep to my revenge. Shakſpeare.
A poor man that oppresseth the poor, is like a sweeping rain which leaveth no food. Proverbs.
Cowen in her course
Tow'rds the Sabrinian shores, as sweeping from her source, Takes Towa. Drayton.

Beaus banish beaus, and coaches coaches drive. Pope.

SWO'RDLAW. n. s. Violence; the law by which all is yielded to the stronger.
So violence
Proceeded, and oppression, and swordlaw,
Through all the plain, and refuge none was found. Milton.

SWO'RDMAN. n. s. [sword and man.] Soldier; fighting man.
Worthy fellows, and like to prove most sinewy swordmen. Shakspeare
At Lecca's house,
Among your swordmen, where so many associate
Both of thy mischief and thy madness mate. Ben Jonson.
Essex was made lieutenant-general of the army, the darling of the swordmen. Clarendon.

SWO'RDPLAYER. n. s. [sword and play.] Gladiator; fencer; one who exhibits in publick his skill at the weapons by fighting prizes.
There they called swordplayers, and this sport such a swordfight. Holcroft.

SWORE. The preterit of swear.
How soon unsay
What feign'd submission swore. Milton.

SWORN. The participle passive of swear.
What does else want credit, come to me,
And I'll be sworn 'tis true. Shakspeare
I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim necessity; and he and I
Will keep a league till death. Shakspeare.
They that are mad against me, are sworn against me. Psalms.
He refused not the civil offer of a Pharisee, though his sworn enemy; and would eat at the table of those who fought his ruin. Calamy.
To shelter innocence,
The nation all elects some patron-knight,
Sworn to be true to love, and slave to fame,
And many a valiant chief enrols his name. Green

SWUM. The pret. and part. pass. of swim.
Air, water, earth,
By fowl, fish, beast, was flown, was swum, was walk'd
Frequent. Milton.

SWUNG. The pret. and part. pass. of swing.
Her hand within her hair the wound,
Swung her to earth, and dragg'd her on the ground Addison.

SYB. adj. [properly sib, ꝛib, Saxon.] Related by blood. The Scottish dialect still retains it.
If what my grandsire to me said, be true,
Siker I am very syb to you. Spenser.

SY'CAMINE. } n. s. A tree. The sycamore
SY'CAMORE. } of scripture is not the same with ours.
Sycamore is our acer majus, one of the kinds of maples: it is a quick grower. Mortimer.
If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, be thou plucked up, and it should obey you. Luke.
I was no prophet, but an herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Amos.
Go to yonder sycamore-tree, and hide your bottle of drink under its hollow root. Wotton.
Sycamores with eglantine were spread,
A hedge about the sides, a covering over head.
Dryden.

SY'COPHANT. n. s. [συκοφάντης; sycophanta, Latin.] A talebearer; a make-bate; a malicious parasite.
Accusing sycophants of all men, did best suit to his nature; but therefore not seeming sycophants because of no evil they said, they could bring any new or doubtful thing unto him, but such as already he had been apt to determine; so as they came but as proofs of his wisdom, fearful and more secure when the fear he had figured in his mind had any probability of event. Sidney.

Like them, they hold all those qualities which the impudent sycophants, at the same time, both ascribe to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing. South.

To SY'COPHANT. v. n. [συκοφαντέω; from the noun.] To play the sycophant. A low bad word.

His sycophanting arts being detected, that game is not to be played the second time; whereas a man of clear reputation, though his barque be split, has something left towards setting up again. Government of the Tongue.

SYCOPHA'NTICK. adj. [from sycophant.] Talebearing; mischievously officious.

To SYCOPHA'NTISE. v. n. [συκοφαντικὸς; from sycophant.] To play the talebearer. Dict.

SYLLA'BICAL. } adj. [syllabique, French; SYLLA'BICK. } from syllable.] Relating to syllables; consisting of syllables.

SYLLA'BICALLY. adv. [from syllabical.] In a syllabical manner.

SY'LLABLE. n. s. [συλλαβὴ; syllabe, French.]

1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation.

I heard
Each syllable that breath made up between them. Shakspeare.

There is that property in all letters of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder.

2. Any thing proverbially concise.

Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not sin as much as we do in every action not commanded? Hooker.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakspeare.

He hath told so many melancholy stories, without one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my fears. Swift.

To SY'LLABLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To utter; to pronounce; to articulate. Not in use.

Airy tongues that syllable men's names
On sands and shores, and desart wildernesses. Milton.

SY'LLABUB. n. s. [rightly SILLABUB, which see.] Milk and acids.

No syllabubs made at the milking pail,
But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale. Beaumont.

Two lines would express all they say in two pages: 'tis nothing but whipt syllabub and froth, without solidity. Felton.

SY'LLABUS. n. s. [συλλαβὸς.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.

SYLLOGISM. n. s. [συλλογισμὸς; syllogisme, French.] An argument composed of three propositions: as, every man thinks; Peter is a man, therefore Peter thinks.

A piece of rhetorick is a sufficient argument of logick, an apologue of Æsop beyond a syllogism in Barbara. Brown.

What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the flint and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms! Bentley.

SYLLOGI'STICAL. } adj. [συλλογιστικὸς; SYLLOGI'STICK. } from syllogism.] Relating to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism.

Though we suppose subject and predicate, and opinion, and propositions and syllogistical connexions in their reasoning, there is no such matter; but the entire business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another. Hale.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complexion does not belong to the syllogistick form of it. Watts.

SYLLOGI'STICALLY. adv. [from syllogistical.] In the form of a syllogism.

A man knows first, and then he is able to prove syllogistically; so that syllogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it. Locke.

To SY'LLOGIZE. v. n. [syllogizer, French; συλλογίζω.] To reason by syllogism.

Logick is, in effect, an art of syllogizing. Baker.

Men have endeavoured to transform logick into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to syllogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge. Watts.

SY'LVAN. adj. [better silvan.] Woody; shady; relating to woods.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,
A sylvan scene! and, as the ranks ascend,
Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view. Milton.

Eternal greens the mossy margin grace,
Watch'd by the sylvan genius of the place. Pope.

SY'LVAN. n. s. [sylvain, French.] A wood-god, or satyr; perhaps sometimes a rustick.

Her private orchards, wall'd on ev'ry side,
To lawless sylvans all access deny'd. Pope.

SY'MBOL. n. s. [symbole, Fr. σύμβολον; symbolum, Latin.]

1. An abstract; a compendium; a comprehensive form.

Beginning with the symbol of our faith, upon that the author of the gloss enquires into the nature of faith. Baker.

2. A type; that which comprehends in its figure a representation of something else.

Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship; which, if it casually fell, was accounted ominous, and their amity of no duration. Brown.

Words are the signs and symbols of things; and as, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so words and names pass for things themselves. South.

The heathens made choice of those lights as apt symbols of eternity, because, contrary to all sublunary beings, though they seem to perish every night, they renew themselves every morning. Addison.

SYMBO'LICAL. adj. [symbolique, French; συμβολικὸς; from symbol.] Representative; typical; expressing by signs; comprehending something more than itself.

By this encroachment idolatry first crept in, men converting the symbolical use of idols into their proper worship, and receiving the representation of things unto them as the substance and thing itself. Brown.

The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as he did appointed. Taylor.

SYMBO'LICALLY. adv. [from symbolical.] Typically; by representation.

This distinction of animals was hieroglyphical, in the inward sense implying an abstinence from certain vices, symbolically intimated from the nature of those animals. Brown.

It symbolically teaches our duty, and promotes charity by a real signature, and a sensible sermon. Taylor.

SYMBOLIZA'TION. n. s. [from symbolize.] The act of symbolizing; representation; resemblance.

The hieroglyphical symbols of scripture, excellently intended in the species of things sacrificed in the dreams of Pharaoh, are oftentimes racked beyond their symbolizations. Brown.

To SYMBOLI'ZE. v. n. [symboliser, Fr. from symbol.] To have something in common with another by representative qualities.

Our king finding himself to symbolize in many things with that king of the Hebrews, honoured him with the title of this foundation. Bacon.

The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with pleasing of any single tone to the ear; but the ordering of order doth symbolize with harmony. Bacon.

Aristotle and the schools have taught, that fire and water, being symbolizing elements, in the quality of moisture, are easily transmutable into one another. Boyle.

They both symbolize in this, that they love to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses. Howel.

I affectedly symbolized in careless mirth and freedom with the libertines, to circumvent libertinism. More.

The soul is such, that it strangely symbolizes with the thing it mightily desires. South.

To SYMBOLIZE, v. a. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours. Brown.

SYMMETRIAN. n. s. [from symmetry.] One eminently studious of proportion.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow. Sidney.

SYMMETRICAL. adj. [from symmetry.] Proportionate; having parts well adapted to each other.

SY'MMETRIST. n. s. [from symmetry.] One very studious or observant of proportion.

Some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being too true. Wotton.

SY'MMETRY. n. s. [symmetrie, Fr. συν and μέτρον.] Adaption of parts to each other; proportion; harmony; agreement of one part to another.

She by whose lines proportion should be
Examin'd, measure of all symmetry;
Whom had that ancient seen, who thought souls made
Of harmony, he would at next have said
That harmony was she. Donne.

And in the symmetry of her parts is found
A pow'r, like that of harmony and sound. Waller.

Symmetry, equality, and correspondence of parts, is the discernment of reason, not the object of sense. More.

Nor were they only animated by him, but their measure and symmetry were owing to him. Dryden.

SYMPATHE'TICAL. } adj. [sympathetique, SYMPATHE'TICK. } Fr. from sympathy.] Having mutual sensation; being affected either by what happens to the other; feeling in consequence of what another feels.

Hereupon are grounded the [illegible] mistakes in the cure of diseases, not only from sympathetick receipts, but amulets, charms, and all incantatory applications. Brown.

United by this sympathetick bond,
You grow familiar, intimate, and fond. Roscommon.

To confer at the distance of the Indies by sympathetick conveyances, may be as usual to future times as to us in a literary correspondence. Glanville.

To you our author makes her soft request,
Who speak the kindest, and who write the best:
Your sympathetick hearts the hopes to move,
From tender friendship and endearing love. Prior.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves, and sympathetical and vital passions produced within ourselves. Bentley.

SYMPATHE'TICALLY. adv. [from sympathetick.] With sympathy; by consequence of sympathy.

To Sy'mpathize. v. n. [sympathiser, Fr. from sympathy.]

1. To feel with another; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually.

The men sympathise with the maſtiffs in robuſtious and rough coming on. Shakſpeare.

The thing of courage,
As rous'd with rage, with rage doth ſympathize. Shakſpeare.

Nature, in awe to him,
Hath doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great maſter ſo to ſympathize. Milton.

The limbs of his body is to every one a part of himſelf: he ſympathizes, and is concerned for them. Locke.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their ſtory, and ſympathized with their heroes in all their adventures. Spectator.

Though the greateſt of their mind exempts them from fear, yet none condole and ſympathize more heartily. Collier.

2. To agree; to fit. Not proper.

Green is a pleaſing colour, from a blue and a yellow mixed together, and by conſequence blue and yellow are two colours which ſympathize. Dryden.

Sy'mpathy. n. ſ. [ſympathie, Fr. συμπάθια.] Fellow-feeling; mutual ſenſibility; the quality of being affected by the affection of another.

A world of earthly bleſſings to my ſoul,
If ſympathy of love unite our thoughts. Shakſpeare.

You are not young; no more am I: go to, then, there's ſympathy: you are merry, ſo am I; ha! ha! then there's more ſympathy: you love ſack, and ſo do I; would you deſire better ſympathy? Shakſpeare.

But what it is,
The action of my life is like it, which I'll keep,
If but for ſympathy. Shakſpeare.

I ſtarted back;
It ſtarted back: but, pleas'd, I ſoon return'd;
Pleas'd it return'd as ſoon, with anſwering looks
Of ſympathy and love. Milton.

They ſaw, but other ſight inſtead, a crowd
Of ugly ſerpents; horror on them toſſ'd,
And horrid ſympathy. Milton.

Or ſympathy, or ſome connat'ral force,
Pow'rful at greateſt diſtance to unite,
With ſecret amity, things of like kind,
By ſecreteſt conveyance. Milton.

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not alſo tender and compaſſionate. It is this noble quality that makes all men to be of one kind; for every man would be a diſtinct ſpecies to himſelf, were there no ſympathy among individuals. South.

Can kindneſs to deſert like your's be ſtrange?
Kindneſs by ſecret ſympathy is ty'd;
For noble ſouls in nature are ally'd. Dryden.

There are ſuch aſſociations made in the minds of moſt men; and to this might be attributed moſt of the ſympathies and antipathies obſervable in them. Locke.

Sympho'nious. adj. [from ſymphony.] Harmonious; agreeing in ſound.

Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the ſound
Symphonious of ten thouſand harps, that tun'd
Angelick harmonies. Milton.

Sy'mphony. n. ſ. [ſymphonie, Fr. σὺν and φωνὴ.] Concert of inſtruments; harmony of mingled ſounds.

A learned ſearcher from Pythagoras's ſchool, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the cuneiform proportion between breadths and heights, reducing ſymmetry to ſymphony, and the harmony of ſound to a kind of harmony in ſight. Wotton.

Speak, ye who beſt can tell, ye ſons of light,
Angels! for ye behold him, and with ſongs
And choral ſymphonies, day without night,
Circle his throne rejoicing. Milton.

The trumpets ſound,
And warlike ſymphony is heard around;
The marching troops through Athens take their way;
The great earl marſhal orders their array. Dryden.

Sy'mphysis. n. ſ. [σὺν and φύω.] Symphyſis, in its original ſignification, denotes a connaſcency, or growing together; and perhaps is meant of thoſe bones which in young children are diſtinct, but after ſome years unite and conſolidate into one bone. Wiſeman.

Sympo'siack. adj. [ſympoſiaque, Fr. συμποσιακὸς.] Relating to merrymakings; happening where company is drinking together.

By deſiring a ſecreſy to words ſpoke under the roſe, we only mean in ſociety and compotation, from the ancient cuſtom of ſympoſiack meetings to wear chaplets of roſes about their heads. Brown.

In ſome of thoſe ſympoſiack diſputations amongſt my acquaintance, I aſſumed that the dietetick part of medicine depended upon ſcientifick principles. Arbuthnot.

Sy'mptom. n. ſ. [ſymptome, French; σύμπτωμα.]

1. Something that happens concurrently with ſomething elſe, not as the original cauſe, nor as the neceſſary or conſtant effect.

The ſymptoms, as Dr. Sydenham remarks, which are commonly ſcorbutick, are often nothing but the principles or ſeeds of a growing, but unripe gout. Blackmore.

2. A ſign; a token.

Ten glorious campaigns are paſſed, and now, like the ſick man, we are expiring with all ſorts of good ſymptoms. Swift.

Symptoma'tical. } adj. [ſymptomatique, Fr. from Symptoma'tick. } ſymptom.] Happening concurrently or occaſionally.

Symptomatical is often uſed to denote the difference between the primary and ſecondary cauſes in diſeaſes; as a fever from pain is ſaid to be ſymptomatical, becauſe it ariſes from pain only; and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in ſuch caſes to be had recourſe to, but to what will remove the pain; for, when that ceaſes, the fever will ceaſe, without any direct means taken for that. Quincy.

By fomentation and a cataplaſm the ſwelling was diſcuſſed; and the fever, then appearing but ſymptomatical, leſſened as the heat and pain mitigated. Wiſeman.

Symptoma'tically. adv. [from ſymptomatical.] In the nature of a ſymptom.

The cauſes of a bubo are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted ſometimes critically, ſometimes ſymptomatically. Wiſeman.

Synago'gical. adj. [from ſynagogue.] Pertaining to a ſynagogue.

Sy'nagogue. n. ſ. [ſynagogue, Fr. συναγωγὴ.] An aſſembly of the Jews to worſhip.

Go, Tubal, and meet me at our ſynagogue. Shakſpeare.

As his cuſtom was, he went into the ſynagogue on the ſabbath. Goſpels.

Syna'liphia. n. ſ. [συναλοιφὴ.] A contraction or excihon of a ſyllable in Latin verſe, by joining together two vowels in the ſcanning, or cutting off the ending vowel; as, ill' ego.

Virgil, though ſmooth, is far from affecting it: he frequently uſes ſynalepha, and concludes his ſenſe in the middle of his verſe. Dryden.

Synarthro'sis. n. ſ. [σὺν and ἄρθρον.] A cloſe conjunction of two bones.

There is a conſpicuous motion where the conjunction is called diarthroſis, as in the elbow; an obſcure one, where the conjunction is called ſynarthroſis, as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wiſeman.

Synchondro'sis. n. ſ. [σὺν and χόνδρος.] Synchondroſis is an union by griſtle, of the ſternon to the ribs. Wiſeman.

Synchro'nical. adj. [σὺν — χρόνος.] Happening together at the ſame time.

It is difficult to make out how the air is conveyed into the left ventricle of the heart, the ſyſtole and diaſtole of the heart and lungs being far from ſynchronical. Boyle.

Sy'nchronism. n. ſ. [σὺν and χρόνος.] Concurrence of events happening at the ſame time.

The coherence and ſynchroniſm of all the parts of the Moſaical chronology, after the flood, bear a moſt regular teſtimony to the truth of his hiſtory. Hale.

Sy'nchronous. adj. [σὺν and χρόνος.] Happening at the ſame time.

The variations of the gravity of the air keep both the ſolids and fluids in an oſcillatory motion, ſynchronous and proportional to their changes. Arbuthnot.

Sy'ncope. n. ſ. [ſyncope, Fr. συγκοπὴ.]

1. Fainting fit.

The ſymptoms attending gunſhot wounds are pain, fever, delirium, and ſyncope. Wiſeman.

2. Contraction of a word by cutting off a part in the middle.

Sy'ncopist. n. ſ. [from ſyncope.] Contractor of words.

To outſhine all the modern ſyncopiſts, and thoroughly content my Engliſh readers, I intend to publiſh a Spectator that ſhall not have a ſingle word in it. Spectator.

To Sy'ndicate. v. n. [ſyndiquer, Fr. σὺν and δίκη.] To judge; to paſs judgment on; to cenſure. An unuſual word. Not in uſe.

Ariſtotle undertook to cenſure and ſyndicate his maſter, and all law-makers before him. Hakewill.

Sy'ndrome. n. ſ. [ſυνδρομὴ.] Concurrent action; concurrence.

All things being linked together by an uninterrupted chain of cauſes, every ſingle motion owns a dependance on ſuch a ſyndrome of prerequired motors. Glanville.

Syne'cdoche. n. ſ. [ſynecdoche, Fr. συνεκδοχὴ.] A figure by which part is taken for the whole, or the whole for part.

Becauſe they are inſtruments of grace in the hand of God, and by theſe his holy ſpirit changes our hearts; therefore the whole work is attributed to them by a ſynecdoche; that is, they do in the manner the work for which God ordained them Taylor.

Synecdo'chical. adj. [from ſynecdoche.] Expreſſed by a ſynecdoche; implying a ſynecdoche.

Should I, Lindamer, bring you into hoſpitals, and ſhew you there how many ſouls, narrowly lodged in ſynecdochical bodies, ſee their earthen cottages moulder away to duſt, thoſe miſerable perſons, by the loſs of one limb after another, ſurviving but part of themſelves, and living to ſee themſelves dead and buried by piecemeal? Eagle.

Synneu'rosis. n. ſ. [σὺν and νεῦρον.] Synneuroſis is when the connexion is made by a ligament. Of this in ſymphyſis we find inſtances in the connexion of the oſſa pubis together, eſpecially in women, by a ligamentous ſubſtance. Juxtaculation, it is either round, as that which unites the head of the os femoris to the coxa; or broad, as the tendon of the patella, which unites it to the os tibiæ. Wiſeman.

Sy'nod. n. ſ. [ſynode, Fr. σύνοδος.]

1. An aſſembly called for conſultation: it is uſed particularly of eccleſiaſticks. A provincial ſynod is commonly uſed, and a general council.

The glorious gods ſit in hourly ſynod about thy particular proſperity. Shakſpeare.

Since the mortal and inteſtine jars
'Twixt thy ſeditious countrymen and us,
It hath in ſolemn ſynod been decreed,
T' admit no traffick to our adverſe towns. Shakſpeare.

The opinion may not only condemned by the fynod, but imputed to the emperor as extreme madneſs. Bacon.

Flea-bitten fynod, an aſſembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders any, like the rude
Chaos of preſbyt'ry, where laymen guide,
With the tame woolpack clergy by their ſide.
Cleaveland.

His royal majeſty, according to theſe preſbyterian rules, ſhall have no power to command his clergy to keep a national ſynod. White.

Well have ye judg'd, well ended long debate,
Synod of gods! and, like to what ye are,
Great things reſolv'd. Milton.

Let us call to ſynod all the bleſt
Through heav'n's wide bounds. Milton.

The ſecond council of Nice, he ſaith, I muſt irreverently call that wiſe ſynod; upon which he falls into a very tragical exclamation, that I ſhould dare to reflect ſo much diſhonour on a council.
Stilling fleet.

Parent of gods and men, propitious Jove!
And you bright ſynod of the pow'rs above,
On this my ſon your gracious gifts beſtow.
Dryden.

Conjunction of the heavenly bodies.

Howe'er love's native hours are ſet,
Whatever ſtarry ſynod met,
'Tis in the mercy of her eye,
If poor love ſhall live or die. Craſhaw.

Their planetary motions and aſpects
Of noxious efficacy, and when to join
In ſynod unbenigh. Milton.

As the planets and ſtars have, according to aſtrologers, in their great ſynods, or conjunctions, much more powerful influences on the air than are aſcribed to one or two of them out of that aſpect; ſo divers particulars, which, whilſt they lay ſcattered among the writings of ſeveral authors, were inconſiderable, when they come to be laid together, may oftentimes prove highly uſeful to phyſiology in their conjunctions. Boyle.

SY'NODAL. n. ſ. [from ſynod.] Money paid anciently to the biſhop, &c. at Eaſter viſitation.

SYNO'DAL. SYNO'DICAL. SYNO'DICK. } adj. [ſynodique, Fr. from ſynod.]

1. Relating to ſynod; tranſacted in a ſynod.

The various dignity of their ſeveral churches, and of their many functions, rules, and orders in them, by reaſon of the frequency of their ſynodical and proceſſional meetings, have neceſſarily raiſed many queſtions of place among them. Selden.

St Athanaſius writes a ſynodical epiſtle to thoſe of Antioch, to compoſe the differences among them upon the ordination of Paulinus. Stilling fleet.

2. [ſynodique, Fr.] Reckoned from one conjunction with the ſun to another.

The diurnal and annual revolutions of the ſun, to us are the meaſures of day and year; and the ſynodick revolution of the moon meaſures the month.
Holder.

The moon makes its ſynodical motion about the earth in twenty-nine days twelve hours and about forty-four minutes. Locke.

SYNO'DICALLY. adv. [from ſynodical.] By the authority of a ſynod or publick aſſembly.

It ſhall be needful for thoſe churches ſynodically to determine ſomething in thoſe points.
Saunderſon.

The alterations made by the commiſſioners were brought to the convocation, then ſitting, where they were ſynodically agreed upon. Neleon.

SYNO'NYMA. n. ſ. [Latin; συνώνυμα.] Names which ſignify the ſame thing.

To SYNO'NYMISE. v. a. [from ſynonyma.] To expreſs the ſame thing in different words.

This word fortis we may ſynonymiſe after all theſe faſhions, ſtout, hardy, valiant, doughty, courageous, adventurous, brave, bold, daring, intrepid.
Camden.

SYNO'NYMOUS. adj. [ſynonyme, French; συνώνυμος.] Expreſſing the ſame thing by different words.

When two or more words ſignify the ſame thing, as wave and billow, mead and meadow, they are uſually called ſynonymous words.

Theſe words conſiſt of two propoſitions, which are not diſtinct in ſenſe, but one and the ſame thing variouſly expreſſed, for wiſdom and underſtanding are ſynonymous words here. Tillotſon.

Fortune is but a ſynonymous word for nature and neceſſity. Bentley.

SYNO'NYMY. n. ſ. [συνωνυμία.] The quality of expreſſing by different words the ſame thing.

Your bugle eye balls, nor your cheek of cream,
Shakspeare.

I do, quoth he, perceive
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.
Shakspeare.

You must lay lime to tangle her desires
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Shall be full fraught with serviceable vows.
Shakspeare.

If thou retire, the dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee.
Shakspeare.

Now ly'st victorious
Among thy slain self-kill'd,
Not willingly, but tangled in the fold
Of dire necessity. Milton.

Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw
Hearts after them, tangled in amorous nets.
Milton.

With subtile cobweb cheats,
They're catch'd in knotted law-like nets;
In which when once they are entangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled.
Hudibras.

3. To embroil; to embarrass.

When my simple weakness strays,
Tangled in forbidden ways,
He, my shepherd! is my guide,
He's before me, on my side. Crashaw.

I am not juſtly to be taxed with any preſumption for meddling with matters wherein I have no dealing. Raleigh.

Tax not divine diſpoſal: wiſeſt men
Have err'd, and by bad women been deceiv'd. Milton.

They cannot tax others omiſſions towards them, without a tacit reproach of their own. Decay of Piety.

He taxed not Homer nor Virgil for intereſſing their gods in the wars of Troy and Italy; neither would he have taxed Milton for his choice of a ſupernatural argument. Dryden.

Men's virtues I have commended as freely as I have taxed their crimes. Dryden.

He call'd him back aloud, and tax'd his fear;
And ſure enough he heard, but durſt not hear. Dryden.

Like ſome rich and mighty murderer,
Too great for priſon, which he breaks with gold,

Who freshes for new mischief does appear,
And dares the world to tax him with the old.
Dryden.

If this be chance, it is extraordinary; and I dare not call it more, for fear of being taxed with superstition. Dryden

If he taxes both of long delay,
My guilt is less, who sooner came away. Dryden.

This salutation cannot be taxed with flattery, since it was directed to a prince, of whom it had been happy for Rome if he had never been born, or if he had never died. Addison.

TA'XABLE. adj. [from tax.] That may be taxed.

TAXA'TION. n. f. [taxation, Fr. taxatio, Lat. from tax.]

1. The act of loading with taxes; impost; tax.

The subjects could taste no sweeter fruits of having a king, than grievous taxations to some vain purposes; laws made rather to find faults than to prevent faults. Sidney.

I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage; my words are as full of peace as matter. Shak.

He daily such taxations did exact,
As were against the order of the state. Daniel.

Various news I heard,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new;
All neither wholly false nor wholly true. Pope.

2. Accusation; scandal.

My father's love is enough to honour; speak no more of him, you'll be whipt for taxation one of these days. Shakspeare.

TA'XER. n. f. [from tax.] He who taxes.

These rumours begot scandal against the king, taxing him for a great taxer of his people. Bacon.

TEA. n. f. [a word, I suppose, Chinese; thé, Fr.] A Chinese plant, of which the infusion has lately been much drunk in Europe.

As he his toilsome team that way did guide,
And brought thee up in ploughman's state to bide.
Spenser.

We fairies that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolick. Shakspeare.

Making such diff'rence betwixt wake and sleep
As is the diff'rence betwixt day and night,
The hour before the heav'nly harness'd team
Begins his golden progress in the east. Shakspeare.

I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me, nor who 'tis I love. Shakspeare.

After the declining sun
Had chang'd the shadows, and their task was done,
Home with their weary team they took their way.
Rejecommon.

He heav'd with more than human force to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team. Dryden.

In stiff clays they may plow one acre of wheat with a team of horse. Mortimer.

2. Any number passing in a line.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings and cleave the liquid sky
Dryden.

TEAR. n. f. [ea in this word is pronounced as ee; tæan, Saxon; taare, Danish; tear rhymes to cheer.]

1. The water which violent passion forces from the eyes.

She comes; and I'll prepare
My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries.
Shakspeare.

The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me,
Knowing that thou wouldst have me drown'd on shore
With tears as salt as sea, through thy unkindness.
Shakspeare.

Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries; but thou hast forced me.
Let's dry our eyes. Shakspeare.

3. To break, or take away by violence.

As storms the skies, and torrents tear the ground,
Thus rag'd the prince, and scatter'd death around.
Dryden.

4. To divide violently; to shatter.

Is it not as much reason to say, that God deals fatherly authority, when he suffers one in possession of it to have his government torn in pieces and shared by his subjects? Locke.

5. To pull with violence; to drive violently.

He roar'd, he beat his breast, he tore his hair
Dryden.

From harden'd oak, or from a rock's cold womb
At least thou art from some fierce tygress come;

Or on rough seas from their foundation torn
Got by the winds, and in a tempest born. Dryden.

Blush rather, that you are a slave to passion,
Which, like a whirlwind, tears up all your virtues,
And gives you not the leisure to consider. A. Philips.

5. To take away by sudden violence.

Solyman
Rhodes and Buda from the christians tore. Waller.

The hand of fate

TE'DIOUS. adj. [tedieux, French; tædium, Latin.]

1. Wearisome by continuance; troublesome; irksome.

The one intense, the other still remiss,
Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton.

Pity only on fresh objects stays,
But with the tedious sight of woes decays. Dryden.

2. Wearisome by prolixity. Used of authors or performances.

They unto whom we shall seem tedious are in nowise injured by us, because it is in their own hands to spare that labour which they are not willing to endure. Hooker.

That I be not further tedious unto thee, hear us of thy clemency a few words. Acts.

Chief mastery to dissect
With long and tedious havock fabled knights. Milton.

3. Slow.

But then the road was smooth and fair to see,
With such insensible declivity,
That what men thought a tedious course to run,
Was finish'd in the hour it first began. Herbert

TE'DIOUSLY. adv. [from tedious.] In such a manner as to weary.

TE'DIOUSNESS. n. s. [from tedious.]

1. Wearisomeness by continuance.

She distastes them all within a while;
And in the sweetest finds a tediousness. Davies.

2. Wearisomeness by prolixity.

In vain we labour to persuade them, that any thing can take away the tediousness of prayer, except it be brought to the same measure and form which themselves assign. Hooker.

3. Prolixity; length.

Since brevity's the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Shakspeare.

4. Uneasiness; tiresomeness; quality of wearying.

In those very actions whereby we are especially perfected in this life, we are not able to persist; forced we are with very weariness, and that often, to interrupt them, which tediousness cannot fall into those operations that are in the state of bliss when our union with God is complete. Hooker.

More than kisses, letters mingle souls,
For thus friends absent speak: this ease controuls
The tediousness of my life. Donne.

To TEEM. v. n. [τeam, Saxon, offspring.]

1. To bring young.

If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her. Shakſp.

2. To be pregnant; to engender young.

Have we more sons! or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunk up with time,
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age? Shakspeare.

When the rising spring adorns the mead,
Teeming buds and cheerful greens appear Dryden.

There are fundamental truths, the basis upon which a great many others rest: these are teeming truths, rich in store, with which they furnish the mind, and, like the lights of heaven, give light and evidence to other things. Locke.

3. To be full; to be charged as a breeding animal.

We live in a nation where there is scarce a single head that does not teem with politicks. Addison.

To TEEM. v. a.

A lyrick ode would slate, a catch
Would tile, an epigram would thatch. Swift.

THA'TCHER. n. s. [from thatch.] One whose trade is to cover houses with straw.

You merit new employments daily;
Our thatcher, ditcher, gard'ner, baily. Swift.

Ash is universal timber; it serves the soldier seaman, carpenter, thatcher, and husbandman. Mortimer.

To THAW. v. n. [Ꝺapan, Saxon; degen Dutch.]

1. To grow liquid after congelation; to melt.

When thy melted maid
His lesser at thy pillow hath laid;
If thou began'st to thaw for this,
May my name step in. Donne.

It on firm land
Thaws not, but gathers heap, and ruin seems
Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice. Milton.

Having let that ice thaw of itself, and frozen the liquor a second time, we could not discern any thing. Boyle.

O Solitude! romantick maid,
Whether by nodding tow'rs you tread,
Or climb the Andes' clifted side,
Or by the Nile's coy source abide,
Or, starting from a half year's sleep,
From Hecla view the thawing deep,
Or Tadmor's marble wastes survey,
Or in yon roofless cloister play;
Here, fond nymph! again I woo,
And again thy steps pursue. Grainger.

2 To remit the cold which had caused frost.

To THAW. v. a. To melt what was congealed.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phœbus' fire scarce thaws the icicles. Shakspeare.

Think not that Cæsar bears such rebel blood,
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth fools. Shakspeare.

My love is thaw'd,
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was. Shakspeare.

She can unlock
The clasping charm, and thaw the numbing spell. Milton.

Burnish'd steel, that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden.

Her icy heart is thaw'd. Granville.

THAW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Liquefaction of any thing congealed.

A man of my kidney, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakspeare.

Hardens his stubborn heart, but still as ice
More harden'd after thaw. Milton.

2. Warmth such as liquifies congelation.

I was the prince's jester, and duller than a great thaw. Shakspeare.

That cold country where discourse doth freeze in the air all winter, and may be heard in the next summer, or at a great thaw. Wilkins.

When sharp frosts had long constrain'd the earth,
A kindly thaw unlocks it with cold rain,
And the tender blade peeps. Dryden.

THE. article. [de, Dutch.]

1. The article noting a particular thing.

Your son has paid a soldier's debt:
He only liv'd but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd,
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he dy'd. Shakspeare.

He put him in mind of the long pretence he had to be groom of the bed-chamber, for the which he could not chuse but say, that he had the queen's promise. Clarendon.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

I'll march the muses, Hannibal. Cowley.

The fair example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark;
Above the stars let thy bold musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world. Milton.

Night shades the groves, and all in silence lie,
All but the mournful Philomel and I. Pope.

2. Before a vowel e is commonly cut off in verse.

Who had th' especial engines been to rear
His fortunes up into the gate they were. Daniel.

Th' adorning thee with so much art
Is but a barb'rous skill:
'Tis like the pois'ning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill. Cowley.

3. Sometimes he is cut off.

In this scale gold, in t' other fame does lie. Cowley.

4. It is used by way of consequential reference.

The longer sin hath kept possession of the heart, the harder it will be to drive it out. Duty of Man.

The round world should have shook
Lions into civil streets, and citizens into their dens. Shakspeare.

For the Italians, Dante had begun to file their language in verse before Boccace, who likewise received no little help from his master Petrarch; but the reformation of their prose was wholly owing to Boccace Dryden.

2. Theirs is used when any thing comes in construction between the possessive and substantive.

Prayer we always have in our power to bestow, and they never in theirs to refuse. Hooker.

They gave the same names to their own idols which the Egyptians did to theirs. Raleigh.

The penalty to thy transgression due,
And due to theirs, which out of thine will grow. Milton.

Nothing but the name of zeal appears
'Twixt our best actions and the worst of theirs. Denham.

Vain are our neighbours hopes, and vain their cares,
The fault is more their language's than theirs. Roscommon.

Which established law of theirs seems too strict at first, because it excludes all secret intrigues. Dryden.

And, reading, wish like theirs our fate and fame. Pope.

THEM. The oblique of they.

The materials of them were not from any herb. Wilkins.

THEME. n. s. [theme, Fr. from Θέμα.]

1. A subject on which one speaks or writes.

Every object of our idea is called a theme, whether it be a being or not being. Watts.

Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme. Shakspeare.

When a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off. Shakspeare.

O! could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as it is my theme:
Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;
Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full. Denham.

Whatever near Eurota's happy stream,
With laurels crown'd, had been Apollo's theme. Roscommon.

Though Tiber's streams immortal Rome behold,
Though foaming Hermus swells with tides of gold;
From heav'n itself though seven-fold Nilus flows,
And harvests on a hundred realms bestows;
These now no more shall be the muse's themes,
Lost in my fame, as in the sea their streams. Pope.

2. A short dissertation written by boys on any topick.

Forcing the empty wits of children to compose themes, verses, and orations. Milton.

2. Afterward; immediately afterward; soon afterward.

If an herb be cut off from the roots in winter, and then the earth be trodden down hard, the roots will become very big in summer. Bacon.

3. In that caſe; in conſequence.

If God's immediate ſpeaking and writing argueth precepts, thus ſpoken or written, to be perpetually moral; then his not writing of precepts argueth them to be temporary. White.

Had not men been fated to be blind,
Then had our lances pierc'd the treach'rous wood.
Dryden.

Had fate ſo pleas'd I had been eldeſt born,
And then without a crime the crown had worn.
Dryden.

If all this be ſo, then man has a natural freedom. Locke.

4. Therefore; for this reaſon.

Whiles then the apoſtle moves us to unity, and moves us alſo to an endeavour to it, he beſtows upon us as well a diſcovery, as an exhortation, ſhewing us not only the end, but alſo the means. Holyday.

If then his providence
Out of our evil ſeek to bring forth good Milton.

Now then be all thy weighty cares away,
Thy jealouſies and fears; and, while you may,
To peace and ſoft repoſe give all the day. Dryden.

5. At another time: as now and then, at one time and other.

Now ſhaves with level wing the deep, then ſoars. Milton.

When a thing is capable of good proof in any kind, men ought to reſt ſatisfied in the beſt evidence for it which that kind of things will bear, and beyond which better would not be expected, ſuppoſing it were true. Wilkins.

I ſhould bluſh to own ſo rude a thing,
As 'tis to ſhun the brother of my king. Dryden.

Wicked men, who underſtand any thing of wiſdom, may ſee the imprudence of worldly and irreligious courſes. Tillotſon.

Princes, when they come to know the true ſtate of things, are not unwilling to prevent their own ruin. Davenant.

2. It is uſed in contempt.

I have a thing in proſe, begun above twenty-eight years ago, and almoſt finiſhed: it will make a four ſhilling volume. Swift.

3. It is uſed of perſons in contempt, or ſometimes with pity.

See, ſons, what things you are! how quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the fooliſh over-careful fathers
Have broke their ſleeps with thought, their brains with care. Shakſpeare.

A thing by neither man or woman priz'd,
And ſcarcely known enough to be deſpis'd. Dryden.

Never any thing was ſo unbred as that odious man. Congreve.

The poor thing ſighed, and, with a bleſſing expreſſed with the utmoſt vehemence, turned from me. Addiſon.

I'll be this abject thing no more,
Love, give me back my heart again. Granville.

4. It is uſed by Shakſpeare once in a ſenſe of honour.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath: but that I ſee thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart. Shakſpeare.

To THINK. v. n. pret. thought. [thankgan, Gothick; Þencean, Saxon; dencken, Dutch.]

1. To have ideas; to compare terms or things; to reaſon; to cogitate; to perform any mental operation, whether of apprehenſion, judgment, or illation.

Thinking, in the propriety of the Engliſh tongue, ſignifies that ſort of operation of the mind about its ideas, wherein the mind is active, where it, with ſome degree of voluntary attention, conſiders any thing. Locke.

What am I? or from whence? for that I am
I know, becauſe I think; but whence I came,
Or how this frame of mine began to be,
What other being can diſcloſe to me? Dryden.

Thoſe who perceive dully, or retain ideas in their minds ill, will have little matter to think on Locke.

It is an opinion, that the ſoul always thinks, and that it has the actual perception of ideas in itſelf conſtantly, and that actual thinking is as inſeparable from the ſoul, as actual extenſion is from the body. Locke.

Theſe are not matters to be ſlightly and ſuperficially thought upon. Tillotſon.

His experience of a good prince muſt give great ſatisfaction to every thinking man. Addiſon.

2. To judge; to conclude; to determine.

Let them marry to whom they think beſt, only to their father's tribe ſhall they marry. Numbers.

I fear we ſhall not find
Thus long deſired king ſuch as was thought. Daniel

Can it be thought that I have kept the goſpel terms of ſalvation, without ever ſo much as intending, in any ſerious and deliberate manner, either to know them, or keep them. Law.

3. To intend.

Thou thought'ſt to help me, and ſuch thanks I give
As one near death to thoſe that wiſh him live.
Shakſpeare.

4. To imagine; to fancy.

Something ſince his coming forth is thought of, which
Imports the kingdom ſo much fear and danger,
That his return was moſt requir'd. Shakſpeare.

Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his miſery, to diſpatch
His nighted life. Shakſpeare.

We may not be ſtartled at the breaking of the exterior earth; for the face of nature hath provoked men to think of and obſerve ſuch a thing. Burnet

Thoſe who love to live in gardens, have never thought of contriving a winter garden. Spectator.

5. To muſe; to meditate.

You pine, you languiſh, love to be alone,
Think much, ſpeak little, and in ſighing figh. Dryden

6. To recollect; to obſerve.

We are come to have the warrant.
——Well thought upon; I have it here about me. Shakſpeare

Think upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done. Nehemiah

7. To judge; to be of opinion.

If your general acquaintance be among ladies, provided they have no ill reputation, you think you are ſafe. Swift.

8. To conſider; to doubt; to deliberate.

Any one may think with himſelf, how then can any thing live in Mercury and Saturn? Bentley.

9. To THINK on. To contrive; to light upon by meditation.

Still the work was not complete,
When Venus thought on a deceit. Swift.

10. To THINK of. To eſtimate.

The opinions of others whom we know and think well of are no ground of aſſent. Locke

To THINK. v. a.

1. To imagine; to image in the mind; to conceive.

Charity thinketh no evil. 1 Corinthians.
Nor think ſuperfluous others aid. Milton.
Think nought a trifle, though it ſmall appear
Young.

2. To believe; to eſteem.

Nor think ſuperfluous others aid. Milton

3. To THINK much. To grudge.

He thought not much to clothe his enemies. Milton

If we conſider our infinite obligations to God, we have no reaſon to think much to ſacrifice to him our deareſt intereſts in this world. Tillotſon

4. To THINK ſcorn. To diſdain.

He thought ſcorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone. Eſther.

5. { Me THINKETH. It ſeems to me. }
{ Me THOUGHT. It appeared to me. }

Theſe are anomalous phraſes of long continuance and great authority, but not eaſily reconciled to grammar. In me thinketh, the verb being of the third perſon, ſeems to be referred not to the thing, and is therefore either active, as ſignifying to cauſe to think; or has the ſenſe of ſeems, methinks it ſeems to me.

Me thought I ſaw the grave where Laura lay
Sidney.

Me thinketh the running of the foremoſt is like that of Ahimaaz. 2 Samuel

THI'NKER. n. ſ. [from think.] One who thinks in a certain manner.

No body is made any thing by hearing of rules, or laying them up in his memory; practice muſt ſettle the habit: you may as well hope to make a good muſician by a lecture on the art of muſick as a coherent thinker, or cloſe reaſoner, by a ſet of rules. Locke.

If a man had an ill-favoured noſe, deep thinkers would impute the cauſe to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

THI'NKING. n. ſ. [from think.] Imagination; cogitation; judgment.

He put it by once; but, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Shakſpeare.

If we did think
His contemplations were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual objects, he should still
Dwell in his musings; but I am afraid
His thinkings are below the moon, nor worth
His serious considering. Shakspeare.

I heard a bird so sing,
Whose musick, to my thinking, pleas'd the king. Shakspeare.

[illegible] a man, to my thinking, very likely to get a [illegible] widow. Addison.

If our own be but equal, the law of common indulgence alloweth us to think them at the least half a thought the better, because they are our own. Hooker.

A needle pierced through a globe of cork, cut away by degrees, will swim under water, yet not sink to the bottom: if the cork be a thought too light to sink under the surface, the water may be attemperated with spirits of wine. Bacon.

My [illegible] and though I now totter, yet I think I am a thought better. Swift.

THO'UGHTFUL. adj. [thought and full.]

1. Contemplative; full of reflection; full of meditation.

On these he mus'd within his thoughtful mind,
And then resolv'd what Faunus had divin'd. Dryden.

2. Attentive; careful.

Thoughtful of gain, I all the live-long day
Consume in meditation deep. Philips.

3. Promoting meditation; favourable to musing.

War, horrid war, your thoughtful walks invades,
And steel now glitters in the muses' shades. Pope.

4. Anxious; solicitous.

In useful pomp, and melancholy state,
See settled reason on the judgment-seat;
Around her crowd distrust, and doubt and fear,
And thoughtful foresight, and tormenting care. Prior.

THO'UGHTFULLY. adv. [from thoughtful.] With thought or consideration; with solicitude.

THO'UGHTFULNESS. n. s. [from thoughtful.]

1. Deep meditation.

While the nervous fibres preserve their due tension and firmness, and the spirits are transmitted to them from the brain, endowed with due strength, swiftness, and vivacity, and suffered to attend their duty, without the avocations of thoughtfulness and intense contemplation, the concoction of the meats is well performed. Blackmore.

2. Anxiety; solicitude.

THO'UGHTLESS. adj. [from thought.]

1. Airy; gay; dissipated.

2. Negligent; careless.

It is something peculiarly shocking to see gray hairs without remorse for the past, and thoughtless of the future. Rogers.

3. Stupid; dull.

His goodly fabrick fills the eye,
And seems design'd for thoughtless majesty:
Thoughtless as monarch oaks, that shade the plain,
And spread in solemn state supinely reign. Dryden.

THO'UGHTLESSLY. adv. [from thoughtless.] Without thought; carelessly; stupidly.

In restless hurries thoughtlessly they live,
At substance oft unmov'd, for shadows grieve. Garth.

THO'UGHTLESSNESS. n. s. [from thoughtless.] Want of thought; absence of thought.

THO'UGHTSICK. adj. [thought and sick.] Uneasy with reflection.

Heav'n's face doth glow
With tristful visage; and, as 'gainst the doom,
Is thoughtsick at the act. Shakspeare.

THO'USAND. adj. or n. s. [ðusend, Sax. duysend, Dutch.]

1. The number of ten hundred.

About three thousand years ago, navigation of the world for remote voyages was greater than at this day. Bacon.

2. Proverbially, a great number.

So fair, and thousand, thousand times more fair
She seem'd, when she presented was to sight. Spenser.

For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd,
Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd. Dryden.

Search the heralds roll,
Where thou shalt rarely find a conspicuous race,
Drawn from the root of some old Tuscan tree,
And thou, a thousand off, a fool of long degree. Dryden.

Though he resolutes himself by penance, he finds a thousand occasions for generosity and compassion. Spectator.

How many thousand pronounce boldly on the affairs of the publick, whom God nor men never qualified for such judgment? Watts.

THO'USANDTH. adj. [from thousand.] The hundredth ten times told; the ordinal of a thousand; proverbially, very numerous.

He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and break but a part of a thousandth part in the affairs of love, it may be said of him, that Cupid hath clapt him o' th' shoulder, but I'll warrant him heart whole. Shakspeare.

Such is the poet's lot: what luckier fate
Does on the works of grave historians wait?
More time they spend, in greater toils engage,
Their volumes swell beyond the thousandth page. Dryden.

The French hugonots are many thousand witnesses to the contrary; and I wish they deserved the thousandth part of the good treatment they had received. Swift.

THOWL. n. s. A piece of timber by which oars are kept in their places when rowing. Ainsw.

He swore with sobs,
That he would labour my delivery.
— Why so he doth, when he delivers you
From this earth's thraldom to the joys of heav'n. Shakspeare.

This country, in a great part desolate, groaneth under the Turkish thraldom. Sandys.

He shall rule, and she in thraldom live. Dryden.

They tell us we are all born slaves; life and thraldom we entered in together, and can never be quit of the one till we part with the other. Locke.

THRALL. n. s. [ðræl, Saxon.]

1. A slave; one who is in the power of another. Not much in use.

No thralls like them that inward bondage have. Sidney.

For tho' the son, he conquer'd, sell in meed,
Let her accept me as her faithful thrall. Spenser.

Look gracious on thy prostrate thrall. Shakspeare.

The two delinquents,
That were the slaves of drink, and thralls of sleep. Shakspeare.

I know I'm one of Nature's little kings,
Yet to the least and vilest [illegible] Davies.

That we may so suffice his vengeful ire,
Or do him mightier service as his thralls
By right of war, whate'er his business be. Milton.

2. Bondage; state of slavery or confinement.

Her [illegible] land
And sish brought [illegible] and all
That richly furnish'd [illegible], he fell in thrall
Of all-subduing sleep. Chapman.

And laid about him, till his nose
From thrall of ring and cord broke loose. Hudibras.

To THRALL. v. a. Spenser. [from the noun.] To enslave; to bring into the power of another. Out of use.

Let me be a slave t' atchieve the maid,
Whose sudden sight hath thrall'd my wounded eye. Shakspeare.

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode
The bad with bad, a spider with a toad.
For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill,
And make her do much good against her will.
Donne.

The author of nature is not thralled to the laws of nature. Drummond.

THRA'PPLE. n. s. The windpipe of any animal. They still retain it in the Scottish dialect; we say rather throttle.

To THRASH. v. a. [Þerscan, Saxon; derschen, Dutch.]

1. To beat corn to free it from the chaff.
This is written variously thrash or thresh, but thresh is agreeable to etymology.
First thresh the corn, then after burn the straw. Shakspeare.
Gideon threshed wheat to hide it. Judges.
Here be oxen for burnt sacrifice, and threshing instruments for wood. 2 Samuel.
In the sun your golden grain display,
And thresh it out, and winnow it by day. Dryden.
This is to preserve the ends of the bones from an incalescency, which they being hard bodies would contract from a swift motion, such as that of running or threshing. Ray.
Out of your clover well dried in the sun, after the first threshing, get what feed you can. Mortimer

2. To beat; to drub.
Thou trusty valiant ass! thou art here but to thrash Trojans, and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit like a barbarian slave. Shakspeare.

To THRASH. v. n. To labour; to drudge.
I rather would be Mevius, thresh for crumbs
Like his, the scorn and scandal of the times,
Than that Philippick fatally divine,
Which is inscribed the second, should be mine
Dryden

THRA'SHER. n. s. [from thrash.] One who thrashes corn.
Our soldiers, like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends
Shakspeare.
Not barely the plowman's pains, the reaper's and thrasher's toil, and the baker's sweat, is to be counted into the bread we eat; the labour of those employed about the utensils must all be charged.
Locke.

THRA'SHINGFLOOR. n. s. An area on which corn is beaten.
In vain the hinds the threshing floor prepare,
And exercise their flails in empty air. Dryden
Delve of convenient depth your thrashing-floor
With temper'd clay, then fill and face it o'er. Dryd.

THU'NDERCLAP. n. f. [thunder and clap.] Explotion of thunder.

The kindly bird that bears Jove's thunderclap,
One day did ſcorn the ſimple ſparrow's pace,
Proud of his higheſt ſervice, and good hap,
That made all other fowls his thralls to be. Spenſer.

When ſome dreadful thunderclap is nigh,
The winged fire ſhoots ſwiftly through the ſky;
Strikes and conſumes ere ſence it does appear,
And, by the ſudden ill, prevents the fear. Dryden.

When ſuddenly the thunderclap was heard,
It took us unprepar'd and out of guard. Dryden.

THU'NDERER. n. f. [from thunder.] The power that thunders.

How dare you, ghoſts,
Accuſe the thunderer, whoſe bolt you know
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coaſts? Shakſp.

Had the old Greeks diſcover'd your abode,
Crete had n't been the cradle of your god;
On that ſmall iſland they had look'd with ſcorn,
And in Great Britain thought the thunderer born.
Waller.

When the bold Typheus
Forc'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
The leſſer gods, that ſhar'd his proſp'rous ſtate,
All ſuffer'd in the exil'd thunderer's fate. Dryden.

TOLL. n. f. [This word seems derived from tollo, Latin; toll, Saxon; tol, Dut. told, Danish; toll, Welsh; taillie, Fr.] An excise of goods; a seizure of some part for permission of the rest.

Toll, in law, has two significations: first, a liberty to buy and sell within the precincts of a manor, which seems to import as much as a fair or market; secondly, a tribute or custom paid for passage. Cowell.

Empson and Dudley the people esteemed as his horse-leeches, bold men, that took toll of their master's grist. Bacon

The same Prusias joined with the Rhodians against the Byzantines, and stopped them from levying the toll upon their trade into the Euxine. Arbuthnot.

To TOLL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To pay toll or tallage.

I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for him: for this, I'll none of him. Shakspeare.

Where, when, by whom, and what y' were told for,
And in the open market toll'd for? Hudibras.

2. To take toll or tallage.

The meale the more yeeldeth, if fervant be true,
And miller that tolleth takes none but his due. Tusser.

3. [I know not whence derived.] To sound as a single bell.

The first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office; and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Remember'd tolling a departed friend Shakspeare.

Our going to church at the toling of a bell, only tells us the time when we ought to go to worship God. Stilling fleet.

Toll, toll,
Gentle bell, for the soul
Of the pure ones. Denham.

You love to hear of some prodigious tale,
The bell that toll'd alone, or lamb whale Dryden.

They give their bodies due repose at night:
When hollow murmurs of their ev'ning bells
Disturb the sleepy swains, and toll them to their cells. Dryden.

With horns and trumpets now to madness swell,
Now sink in sorrows with a tolling bell. Pope.

To TOLL. v. a. [tollo, Latin.]

1. To ring a bell.

When any one dies, then by tolling or ringing of a bell the same is known to the searchers. Graunt

2. To take away; to vacate; to annul. A term only used in the civil law: in this sense the o is short, in the former long.

An appeal from sentence of excommunication does not suspend it, but then devolves it to a superior judge, and tolls the presumption in favour of a sentence. Ayliffe.

3. To take away, or perhaps to invite. Obsolete.

The adventitious moisture which hangeth loose in a body, betrayeth and telleth forth the innate and radical moisture along with it. Bacon.

TO'LLBOOTH. n. f. [toll and booth.] A prison. Ainsworth.

TOLUTA'TION. n. f. [voluto, Latin.] The act of pacing or ambling.

They move per latera, that is, two legs of one side together, which is tolutation or ambling. Brown.

They rode; but authors having not
Determin'd whether pace or trot,
That is to say, whether tolutation,
As they do term't, or succussation,
We leave it. Hudibras.

TOMB. n. f. [tombe, tombeau, Fr. tumba, low Latin.] A monument in which the dead are enclosed.

Methinks, I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakspeare.

Time is drawn upon tombs an old man bald, winged, with a sithe and an hour-glass. Peacham.

Poor heart! she slumbers in her silent tomb:
Let her possess in peace that narrow room. Dryden.

The secret wound with which I bleed
Shall lie wrapt up, ev'n in my herse;
But on my tomb-stone thou shalt read
My answer to thy dubious verse. Prior.

To TOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bury; to entomb.

Souls of boys were there,
And youths that tomb'd before their parents were. May.

TO'MBLESS. adj. [from tomb.] Wanting a tomb; wanting a sepulchral monument.

Lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them. Shakspeare.

TO'MBOY. n. f. [Tom, a diminutive of Thomas, and boy.] A mean fellow; sometimes a wild coarse girl.

TO'RRENT. n. ſ. [torrent, French; torrens, Latin.]

1. A ſudden ſtream raiſed by ſhowers.

The near in blood
Forſake me like the torrent of a flood. Sandys.

Will no kind flood, no friendly rain,
Diſguiſe the marſhal's plain diſgrace;
No torrents ſwell the low Mohayne?
The world will ſay he durſt not paſs. Prior.

2. A violent and rapid ſtream; tumultuous current.

Not far from Caucaſus are certain ſteep-falling torrents, which waſh down many grains of gold as in many other parts of the world; and the people there inhabiting uſe to ſet many fleeces of wool in theſe deſcents of waters, in which the grains of gold remain, and the water paſſeth through, which Strabo witneſſeth to be true. Raleigh.

The memory of thoſe who, out of duty and conſcience, oppoſed that torrent which did overwhelm them, ſhould not loſe the recompenſe due to virtue. Clarendon.

When ſhrivell'd herbs on with'ring ſtems decay,
The wary ploughman, on the mountain's brow,
Undams his watry ſtores, huge torrents flow;
Temp'ring the thirſty fever of the field. Dyer.

And full of peace, now tost and turbulent. Milton.

6. To keep in play; to tumble over.

That scholar should come to a better knowledge in the Latin tongue, than most do that spend four years in tossing all the rules of grammar in common schools. Ascham.

To TOSS. v. n.

1. To fling; to winch; to be in violent commotion.

Dire was the tossing! deep the groans! despair
Tended the sick, busiest from couch to couch. Milton.

Galen tells us of a woman patient of his whom he found very weak in bed, continually tossing and tumbling from one side to another, and totally deprived of her rest. Harvey.

To toss and fling, and to be restless, only frets and enrages our pain. Tillotson.

And thou, my sire, not destin'd by thy birth
To turn to dust and mix with common earth,
How wilt thou toss and rave, and long to die,
And quit thy claim to immortality! Addison.

They throw their person with a hoyden air
Across the room, and toss into the chair. Young.

2. To be tossed.

Your mind is tossing on the sea,
There where your argosies
Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakspeare.

3. To TOSS up. To throw a coin into the air, and wager on what side it shall fall.

I'd try if any pleasure could be found
In tossing up for twenty thousand pound. Brampston.

TOSS. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of tossing.

The discus that is to be seen in the hand of the celebrated Castor at Don Livio's is perfectly round; nor has it any thing like a sling fastened to it, to add force to the toss. Addison.

2. An affected manner of raising the head.

His various modes from various fathers follow;
One taught the toss, and one the new French wallow;
His sword-knot this, his cravat that designed. Dryden.

There is hardly a polite sentence in the following dialogues which doth not require some suitable toss of the head. Swift.

TO'SSEL. n. s. See TASSEL.

Tie at each lower corner a handful of hops with a piece of packthread to make a tossel, by which you may conveniently lift the bag when full. Mortimer.

TO'SSER. n. s. [from toss.] One who throws; one who flings and writhes.
